Reagan bends to win MX support

By HELEN THOMAS
UPI White House Reporter

WASHINGTON — President Reagan said Friday he is willing to compromise on his controversial "dense pack" MX missile basing plan.

The basis for a deal ensuring congressional approval of MX production money seems to have emerged.

"Conceding he has a 'tough fight' but is 'vitality concerned,' Reagan appealed to the Senate to restore $988 million in MX production money voted down by the House this week.

But Reagan, in a hastily called Oval Office question-and-answer session, signaled flexibility on his plan to put 100 of the intercontinental nuclear missiles in closely spaced silos in Wyoming.

"If the Congress wants to debate and discuss and see if there are possible other options that could conceivably be improvements over this, we're willing for that," he said.

Several hours later, Sens. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., and Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., both key MX opponents, indicated a compromise probably can be reached under which the production money would be approved, but "fenced" so it cannot be spent until both the House and Senate approve a basing plan.

"The president today made a very conciliatory statement," said Hatfield.

Hollings said he discussed the idea with Assistant Senate Republican leader Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, chairman of the defense appropriations subcommittee. "We're not far apart," he said. "The money can be passed, but it will be fenced."

A White House spokesman said the administration would support the idea of "fencing" the funds so long as congressional action on the basing plan is "completed in the next few months." The administration would not go along with "a legislative situation that could lead to prolonged debating, hearings and delays by opponents," he said.

CBS News reported Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., acted as an intermediary between the White House and other Democrats on a compromise that would earmark $2.2 billion in research and development money for an immediate study to discover an alternative to dense pack.

Then, as suggested by Hollings and Hatfield at their news conference, the Senate would appropriate the production funds that would not actually be spent until the basing question is settled.

Jackson could not be reached for comment. But he told reporters earlier, "I wouldn't want to guess numbers but I think there's a clear majority for MX in the Senate once you don't tie it exclusively to dense pack. Dense pack as it has been presented up to this point is dead."

The Senate had planned to take up the the $231 billion 1983 defense appropriations bill Friday, but put it off until next week. The House stripped MX production money from that measure Tuesday.

To get money back, Reagan must win over the Republican-dominated Senate, but must also get the Democratic House to reverse itself in conference, with the lame-duck session fast coming to a close.

"I have no doubt we're faced with a tough fight. We're going to wage that fight," Reagan said. "I can't sit here and say this will be a breeze."

Reagan called to the White House Edward Rowny, chief U.S. negotiator to the Strategic Arms Reduction Talks, who told reports a defeat of the MX "undercuts me" at the nuclear arms talks with the Soviets scheduled to resume in Geneva Feb. 2 and would be "very damaging."

Should Congress defeat the MX, Rowny said, "we will have to re-evaluate" the U.S. position for the talks. "We would have to see where we go from there. We wouldn't be able to get the kind of deep reductions" in nuclear strength the United States is seeking.

The MX is "absolutely essential to a strong defense," Reagan said. "It is vital that the government let both its friends and foes know it has the means to be a credible force for peace in the world."

Reagan said MX opponents unfairly made the basing question part of the House debate and he noted the 245-176 House vote against production was warmly received by the Kremlin.

United Way doesn't meet campaign goal

By PAT MARCANTONIO
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The United Way ended its 1982 campaign Friday with more than $137,000 in pledges. But it just wasn't enough to meet the goal of $190,000.

Still, there was a little good news.

According to Sandy Thomas, the executive director of the United Way of Magic Valley, the amount raised is about 10 percent over the actual amount of money collected during last year's campaign.

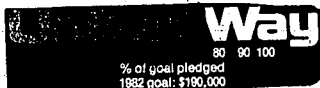

Last year, the United Way also fell short of its goal, set at $160,000. But then, a $16,000 reserve fund, plus interest was added to the $125,000 the campaign netted, bringing the total closer to the goal, according to Walt Sinclair, this year's assistant campaign manager.

This year, however, there are no reserve funds available.

Although there will be no more solicitation of funds, United Way officials believe that additional money will be donated, Thomas said Friday afternoon.

The $137,000 collected so far represents about 72 percent of the goal.

The campaign's 200-plus volunteers are to be congratulated for their efforts, Thomas said. Considering the campaign's proximity to Christmas, they should be proud of the fact that there was a 10 percent increase over last year, she said.

However, Sinclair said that in retrospect, the $190,000 goal may have been too high.

"In setting the goal, there are two factors working against each other. The needs of the agencies, which were well over the $190,000, vs. the ability to raise money, which was under this year," he said. "We were overly optimistic this year."

The campaign was well-organized and the volunteer support was excellent, Sinclair said, but "we were just facing a tough economic situation."

Also, the public may have failed to recognize that inflation also affects the budgets of the 15 social-service agencies supported by the United Way, Thomas said.

The United Way executive officers and the allocation committee will meet next Tuesday to discuss alternatives to deal with the shortage, Thomas said. The recommendations that result will be reported to the board when it meets Jan. 16.

"We're optimistic for next year," Sinclair said. "We'd like to thank those who did contribute, the agencies for their support, and we'll see them all next year."

Producer prices up slightly, auto sales increase sharply

By DENIS G. GULINO
United Press International

WASHINGTON — Soaring natural gas costs pushed the government's measure of producer prices up 0.6 percent in November, the Labor Department reported Friday.

But the economy also got some rare good news — retail sales improved by a strong 2.3 percent in November, led by the biggest surge in automobile buying in nearly 11 years.

Despite bulging supplies of natural gas, costs of using it to heat homes rose a precipitous 5 percent — largest gain in nearly three years. Some legislators immediately called for a two-year natural gas price freeze.

Without including energy prices or the 0.2 percent drop in food prices, the Producer Price Index would have gone up 0.5 percent.

The moderate 1982 increase in wholesale prices has been at an annual rate of only 3.7 percent through November, lowest since 1976 showed an identical increase for that entire year. Stable world oil prices, ample harvests and the recession have combined to discourage price increases.

The price stability at the wholesale level has been helping keep retail prices stable as well, with the Consumer-Price Index running at 4.3 percent for the year so far.

Early Christmas

On Friday, the Twin Falls Board of Realtors brought Christmas gifts to the residents of the Skyview-Hazelwood Manor nursing home in Twin Falls. Louise Ward, left, of the organization, helps resident Margie Bolton unwrap her gift. The gifts included items such as sweaters, hand lotion, toothpaste, colognes and leg-warmers. The rest home continues to look for other persons or groups interested in giving Christmas presents to the residents.

Gas tax supporters flex vote power

By WESLEY G. PIPPERT
United Press International

WASHINGTON — Supporters of President Reagan's gasoline tax hike displayed crushing strength Friday.

They won the first test vote against a conservative Republican filibuster aimed at killing the legislation.

Meanwhile, the House Appropriations Committee voted to attach the House Democrats' $5.4 billion additional jobs bill to a crucial government-funding measure, possibly killing a Reagan bill.

It was a day of tangled parliamentary maneuvering for the $5.5 billion gasoline tax increase, which would pay for repairs on the nation's highways, bridges and transit systems and create an estimated 320,000 jobs.

When GOP leader Howard Baker moved to take up the gasoline increase, the conservatives mounted their filibuster. Baker quickly filed a cloture petition to shut off a talkathon, and the Senate scheduled a vote on it Monday.

Sen. Don Nickles, R-Okla., one of the leaders of the filibuster, countered Baker by moving to delay taking up the bill until Jan. 2, one day before the 97th Congress officially goes out of business. Baker's motion to kill Nickles' effort carried 79-10.

Ending the filibuster requires 60 votes, and the margin against Nickles indicates Baker will prevail with votes to spare on Monday.

The development threatened a holiday break for members of Congress. A Baker spokesman held out the possibility Congress might recess Dec. 17 but return Dec. 27 to complete action on necessary legislation.

The House passed a highway program bill would raise the tax to 9 cents a gallon and raise $5.5 billion in revenue a year. The additional levy would be due to expire in 1989, but Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., said: "There's nothing so permanent as a temporary tax."

With the nation suffering the highest unemployment rate since the Great Depression, critics said most jobs would go to skilled construction workers at high union wages, boosting the cost of federal projects and providing little help for joblessness among low-paid workers.

Sens. Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., Don Nickles, R-Okla., and Helms, led the filibuster, protesting any new taxes.

They also contended the bill would extend the Davis-Bacon Act to rehabilitation as well as new construction projects. The act requires the payment of union wage scales on federal contracts.

Senate Democratic leader Robert Byrd, whose Senate colleagues earlier proposed a $9.7 billion jobs bill, predicted the lame-duck Senate would pass the highways bill. "I would hope so and would think so," he said.

House Democrats proposed a $5.4 billion proposal for 800,000 new jobs covering everything from jails to food distributions. The House Appropriations Committee voted 25-18 to attach it to a stopgap funding resolution Congress must pass by Dec. 17 to finance the government until passage or appropriations bills.

"This is a Christmas tree," shouted Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Mass., who predicted President Reagan would veto the funding resolution. "You put so many packages on the tree that the limbs are tipping down and the tree is falling over. These are not programs; these are fantasies!"

The proposal would generate jobs mostly through public works programs to repair veterans' hospitals, highways, sewers and the like.

"We're serious about a jobs bill," House Democratic Whip Tom Foley of Washington said. "We would like to see it enacted in whole or in part. If the president doesn't accept it, that's his problem. But it's not going to end our efforts. We'll be back in the new Congress" with other proposals.

Statehouse can have tree

BOISE (UPI) — Boise's fire marshal has approved the 25-foot state Christmas tree, although its status was in doubt for a time.

Marshal Dean Goodner asked state officials Thursday to spray the huge blue spruce with fire retardant, but they said it would be an impossible chore because the tree already had been erected in the middle of the Capitol.

The city fire department has made the same request in past years, but did not have the authority to enforce the Boise fire code on state buildings until this year, when the state adopted a new fire code that officials interpreted to mean the traditional Statehouse tree would have to be sprayed.

Although Idaho officials balked, they did manage to find a company that would perform the service for free.

However, Goodner backed down, saying "a degree of reasonableness must be exercised when you make these provisions and enforce the code."

He said the tree will be safe anyway because the building is made of marble, a janitor will be on duty and electric lights will not be used.

Playtex wins tampon suit

NORFOLK, Va. (UPI) — A federal jury found International Playtex Inc. innocent Friday in the death of a woman whose husband filed a $3 million lawsuit alleging she died from toxic shock syndrome caused by the firm's super-absorbent tampons.

The jury of two men and four women delivered its verdict after about 3 1/2 hours of deliberations.

Jeffrey Ellis, whose wife, Margaret, died in 1981, declined comment. But his lawyer, former Virginia Lt. Gov. Henry Howell, said he was "very disappointed" and would appeal the verdict.

"I believe we have a very strong case," said Howell. — Playtex attorneys William Robinson and Charles McCaghey said they were "very pleased."

Argentinians march for rights

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (UPI) — An estimated 5,000 protesters Friday ended a 25-hour vigil for human rights by marching to the national congress building where they were greeted by hundreds of machine-gun wielding riot police.

Three hundred women who organized the march, mothers whose children disappeared during the government's anti-leftist repression of the late 1970s, led a slow procession to the congress building to mark International Human Rights Day.

Thousands of protesters, chanting anti-government slogans and carrying banners, followed.

Many of the gray-haired women limped on bandaged feet, swollen from their 24-hour silent march near the Plaza de Mayo, an historic meeting place for anti-government demonstrations.

Today's weather

Warmer temperatures, clouds Sunday

Twin Falls, Jerome-Gooding, Burley-Rupert areas:

Warmer and partly cloudy today and Sunday. Increasing clouds Sunday. High upper 20s to mid 30s today and 30s Sunday. Lows tonight upper teens and 20s.

Camas Prairie, Halley, Wood River valley:

Fair and warmer today, with some fog patches. Increasing clouds Sunday. High mid 30s to 40s today and 40s Sunday. Lows tonight upper teens to mid 20s.

Northern Nevada and Utah:

Warmer and partly cloudy for both states today and Sunday.

Synopsis:

Historical note: 10 years ago today, Boise recorded its coldest morning since 1972 — the mercury dropped to 23 degrees below zero with 5 inches of snow on the ground. The afternoon high only reached 1 degree below zero. In contrast, Friday was rather balmy.

A dry and stable upper level ridge of high pressure remained over the Pacific Northwest Friday. However, there was sufficient low level moisture for some valley fog and low cloudiness.

Skies were mostly sunny over Idaho. However, surface visibility was restricted to less than a mile at times in the Snake River Valley from Twin Falls to Pocatello because of fog and haze. Also, a low overcast remained in the Lewiston area in the afternoon. Most mountains are clear and sunny sides and unrestricted visibility.

Highest temperature in the state Friday was 39 reported at Hagerman, while Stanley reported the low, 18 degrees below zero.

"The March of Resistance was carried out despite the police prohibition against doing it in the Plaza," said Eche de Bonafant, president of the Mothers of the Plaza de Mayo, an organization that has pressed the military government for information on the fate of their loved ones.

More than 1,000 riot police brandishing machine guns and tear-gas kept tight control on the crowd for more than 24 hours, starting Thursday afternoon when the women began to march toward the plaza.

Cosmonauts end long mission

MOSCOW (UPI) — Cosmonauts Anatoly Bereznov and Valentin Lebedev ended history's longest manned spaceflight Friday, successfully touching down in Soviet central Asia, the official news agency Tass reported.

The cosmonauts, both 40, returned to Earth safely aboard their Soyuz T-7 capsule at 10:03 p.m. Moscow time (2:03 p.m. EST) — 21 1/2 days, 9 hours and 5 minutes after their May 13 blastoff, the agency said.

The space capsule, tracked by helicopters, landed 120 miles east of the town of Dzhezkazgan on the plains of Kazakhstan, about 1,500 miles southeast of Moscow. Temperature at the landing site was reported at 5 degrees Fahrenheit.

"The medical checkup of the cosmonauts performed at the landing site has shown that they withstood well the prolonged stay in conditions of weightlessness," Tass said.

Soviet television carried special reports on the conclusion of the mission, but no live transmissions from the area of the landing.

Zia asks for U.S. investment

NEW YORK (UPI) — President Mohammad Zia ul-Haq appealed Friday to a black tie gathering of American business leaders for U.S. investment dollars, ignoring demonstrators outside shouting "Down with Butcher Zia."

Zia, on the fifth day of a tour of the United States and Canada, said Pakistan had done away with most controls on its economy, leaving the industrial sector "almost entirely to private enterprise."

He pledged by mid-1983 to rid the economy of "all constraints and irritants which have outlived their utility and which no longer serve any economic or social purpose."

The 58-year-old general said his country was particularly interested in foreign investment in the energy sector to remedy shortages.

"Foreign investment in oil and gas exploration, for which reasonably good prospects exist, would be most welcome," Zia told dinner guests who paid $100 a plate.

Earlier Zia met separately with former President Richard Nixon and former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger as well as Citicorp President Walter Wriston and Industrialist Armand Hammer.

Hansen alleges coercion

BOISE (UPI) — The Rural Electrification Administration is threatening to withhold funds from Northwest energy cooperatives which refuse to pay bills stemming from the failure of two Washington state nuclear power projects, Rep. George Hansen, R-Idaho, charged Friday.

In a letter of protest to U.S. Agriculture Secretary John-Block, Hansen said several Idaho electric cooperatives are being coerced into the unbalanced Washington Public Power Supply System plans by the REA.

"The federal agency has told those cooperatives to be prepared to make payment on assessments by WPSS in January, Hansen said.

The lawmaker said that command amounts to coercion "since it is coupled with allegations that REA will refuse credit to those coops which do not make the payment, will accelerate existing debts and will call all loans between REA and any non-paying coop."

"This stance of REA is unconscionable in the face of the massive litigation now proceeding in several cases contesting the validity of the contract under which these coops are alleged to be responsible for the WPSS bonds, principal and interest," Hansen said.

The Second District representative argued that cooperatives have a "compelling" interest in not paying their WPSS bills because the issue of the validity of the charges remains tangled in the courts. He said any payment of these bills is unwise until the matter is cleared up in court.

Hansen urged Block to shut down any plans by the REA — a subsidiary of the Agriculture Department — to bully small coops. "In the name of maintaining the integrity of the court system and for the basic reason that elemental fairness requires it."

Tripoli reported in state of siege

By United Press International

Guerrillas loyal to Syrian occupation forces exchanged sniper fire with rival militiamen in Tripoli Friday, leaving parts of Lebanon's second largest city under a virtual state of siege with no water or electricity.

Most of Tripoli was shut down in a general strike by merchants and shopkeepers to protest four straight days of fighting that has left 25 dead and 125 wounded. Police said two people were killed by sniper fire Friday.

In London, Lebanese Foreign Minister Elie Salem asked Britain to join the multi-national peace-keeping force to hasten the withdrawal of Israeli, Syrian and Palestinian forces from Lebanon.

But in Tel-Aviv, a senior army planner said Israel might remain in Lebanon for some six months to a year.

Maj. Gen. Ehud Barak, chief of planning in the Israeli general staff, told a civic function that Israel and the Beirut-Damascus highway — conditions Lebanon ready to stay in Lebanon for as long as a year until a proper arrangement could be worked out.

He said Israel's control of the Shouf mountains east of Beirut and the Beirut-Damascus highway — conditions Lebanon ready to stay in Lebanon for as long as a year until a proper arrangement could be worked out.

Salem, wrapping up a three-day visit to London, said he expected the United States, France and Italy would soon double the size of the 4,100-peace-keeping force in Lebanon to ensure the withdrawal of foreign troops.

Salem said he expected the multi-national force would be strengthened to 15,000, expanded by the presence of troops from nine or ten other countries, including the United States.

Like Tripoli, factional fighting has erupted in the villages in the Shouf mountains, a strategic area controlled by Israeli troops that overlooks the Bekaa Valley.

Tripoli, a coastal city 35 miles north of Beirut, is controlled by Syrian troops who entered Lebanon during the 1975-1976 civil war. Most of Syria's 40,000 troops in Lebanon are deployed in Tripoli and the eastern Bekaa Valley.

The latest trouble in Tripoli began Tuesday when the pro-Syrian militia of Ali Aida clashed with the anti-Syrian Popular Resistance coalition of leftist and Palestinian militias.

Three people died and 35 were wounded Wednesday. On Thursday, one of the worst days of fighting in the city since the civil war, 20 died and 90 were wounded.

Islamic merchants and businessmen in Tripoli staged a 24-hour general strike to protest the fighting and to express support for a proposal to clear the city of heavy weapons.

MX

"All this bill entailed is money to start production of the missile. And, yes, unfairly, the opponents or the proponents of that amendment in the House made the entire debate not on whether we need the missile but on the basing mode," he said.

"I also think it's fair to mention a couple of headlines I came across earlier this week after the House voted. One said, 'Soviets Voice Satisfaction on MX Rejection.' The other read, 'Soviets Cheer House for Rejecting MX Missile Appropriation.'

"Well, if the Soviets are so pleased, perhaps we should be a little more concerned."

Dense pack is designed to protect U.S. retaliatory capability. It calls for basing 100 MX missiles in closely spaced silos in Wyoming on the theory that radiation, blast, fireball and debris from the first exploding Soviet warhead would destroy later-arriving Russian warheads and prevent them from course, leaving MX intact. Critics charge the plan won't work.

Reagan noted he proposed the plan to meet a Dec. 1 deadline set by Congress.

Economy

retail sales was the best since May. But the strongest auto sales since since January, 1971, was heavily influenced by factory incentives to sell leftover 1982 models. Without auto purchases, retail sales would have climbed only an anemic 0.5 percent.

The November index for gasoline prices also went up, but the 1.1 percent hike was entirely due to a statistical adjustment for typical seasonal patterns. Actual gasoline prices dropped 1.4 percent for the month, but typically would be expected to drop even more at this time of year — thus, the index increase.

Unlike gasoline, natural gas prices do not move in seasonal patterns, and a report Friday by Congress' investigating arm, the General Accounting Office, showed they are not moving in response to supply and demand, either.

A GAO report concluded "an excess of supply over demand ... would be expected to lead to a lower price," but that nevertheless "prices have been rising."

The report said the average residential price will climb 20 percent next month, with some households facing a 70 percent increase. But increases for commercial customers often are held down to discourage a switch to fuel oil, the report said.

A sponsor of legislation to freeze natural gas prices, Sen. Thomas Eagleton, D-Mo., said, "These figures clearly show that most people suspect: most of the money paid every month in gas bills is padding the pockets of a few producers."

The Labor Department's prices report revealed a significant turnaround for raw materials prices, most sensitive to any rebound in the economy.

Raw materials prices were up 0.9 percent, the first increase in that category in six months. But the natural gas change and raw food prices were the main reasons, with industrial materials continuing to fall.

Before seasonal adjustment, the Producer Price Index was 234.9, equivalent to a price of $2.49 for the same goods and services, that cost business $1,000 in 1967.

Prices for passenger cars and light trucks showed little change.

Town's greetings

Citizens of Elk Grove, Calif. turn out Friday to sign an eight-foot square Christmas card to President Reagan and the nation. The card will be presented to Congress Tuesday.

On Love Canal

Government moves against firm

By HENRY DAVID ROSSO
United Press International

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department, citing possible chemical contamination of Niagara Falls water plant property, took a new step Friday against the Occidental Chemical Corp. and the city of Niagara Falls, N.Y.

The government said its information indicates the contamination came from incinerator residues and industrial and household wastes and was not related to the chemicals dumped at nearby Love Canal.

The suit filed in U.S. District Court in Buffalo, N.Y., sought "to insure that the remedial measures requested by the United States concerning the drinking water treatment plant property can be fully carried out and the city ... takes necessary measures with respect to such contaminants."

The government asked permission to add claims to its original suit filed Dec. 20, 1979, against Hooker Chemical and Plastics Corp., the predecessor to Occidental Chemical, in connection with Love Canal. The suit was one of four filed against Hooker.

President Jimmy Carter declared a national emergency in 1980 in the Love Canal area where Hooker dumped tons of chemical wastes during the 1940s and 1950s. Hundreds of families moved out of the area and the federal government and New York State bought their abandoned houses.

Since the time the government filed its first amended complaint, the United States has received information, including chemical analyses of ground water samples, indicating that a portion of the city of Niagara Falls'

Drinking Water Treatment Plant property was formerly used as a disposal site and is contaminated not only with chemicals ... but also with wastes containing hazardous substances," the government said.

The Justice Department said its information "indicates that a portion of the city Drinking Water Treatment Plant property and other nearby city owned property was used from approximately 1950 to 1960 as a disposal area for incinerator residues and industrial wastes, as well as household wastes."

The chemicals "are not believed" to have migrated from the Love Canal area, however, and "are not specific to Occidental's manufacturing processes," the department said.

The proposed complaint asks the court to require Occidental, and Niagara Falls "to reimburse the federal government for all costs of investigating the contamination."

The Justice Department also asked the court to require the city "to participate with Occidental in a program to determine the extent of the contamination and in preparation of a remedial program to clean up the contamination."

Officials want people to take abused horses

TYLER, Texas (UPI) — Federal officials Friday talked with the first group of people who will adopt the 129 wild horses that survived starvation in a Texas ranch.

The potential owners, who will be carefully screened as to their ability to provide a good home for the animals, were described as "happy and tickled" to come Sunday to pick up their new charges.

Meanwhile, the Bureau of Land Management, acting under a federal search warrant, seized three more wild horses in the area although they were being well-cared for.

BLM spokesman John Gurnert said they were seized for the federal investigation into how 170 horses — including 39 which had died — were left to starve in a small pasture enclosure.

Gurnert said rancher Joe Corbett was being investigated for violation of federal program under which he adopted the wild horses. Corbett has been charged with one misdemeanor count of cruelty to animals, but officials have indicated more charges will be filed.

Gurnert said six criminal investigators were still in the field pleading together the incidents that led to the starvation of the horses. He said the case appears to be more than just a man not being able to feed his horses.

Gurnert said "five or six" people at the top of a list of new owners drawn up through a lottery were called Friday.

"The first ones will be adopted beginning Sunday," he said. "A veterinarian gave the go-ahead today for the adoptions."

"They (the new owners) are anxious. They're ready to go. They are happy and tickled and glad they were called."

Jerry Owens, executive vice president of Fund for Animals — the humane organization which has been caring for the horses on its Black Beauty Ranch — said the organization new owners to make sure the horses would have good living conditions.

"We want to make sure they know what they're getting into," he said. "These horses have been through enough."

He said the horses have made exceptional medical progress.

"They are beginning to look like horses," he said.

Reagan repeats charges on nuclear freeze supporters

By HELEN THOMAS
UPI White House Reporter

WASHINGTON — President Reagan reiterated his charge Friday that the Soviet Union is the "originator" of the nuclear freeze movement and said antinuclear activists unwittingly may be "carrying water" for the Kremlin.

Reagan, in a 10-minute question-and-answer session with reporters that focused on the MX missile, noted "the first man who proposed the nuclear freeze" was Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev, Feb. 21, 1981.

Reagan was asked about a statement Thursday by the chairman of the House Select Committee on Intelligence that there is "no direct evidence" the Soviets have been successful in managing the freeze movement.

"There have been several, rather well documented articles that have appeared in print with regard to, let us say then, participation in the peace move by the Soviets," Reagan said. "We know that the originator — the originating organization of that was the World Peace Council, which is a Soviet organization supported by and maintained by them."

"I can tell you that I have made inquiry on some of the articles that have appeared and asked for an analysis of whether they were factual or not. And the reports that I have received back, though, is that with — here and there an exception — for journalistic exaggeration — they did check out," Reagan said.

"And all I am saying is that one must look to see whether, well intentioned though it may be, this movement might be carrying water that they're not aware of for another purpose."

Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass., a freeze advocate, said Reagan's allegation that Brezhnev initiated the proposals is false.

"The idea was raised in the 1950s, President Johnson proposed it in the 60s and Jimmy Carter as well raised it during the SALT negotiations."

Citizens Against Nuclear War, a coalition of three dozen groups that includes unions, environmental and religious organizations, demanded the president apologize.

"President Reagan owes an apology to the American people who work for peace," said Terry Herndon, president of the organization. He said the organization's highest priority is a mutual, verifiable nuclear freeze.

The National Conference of State Legislatures, official representative of the 7,500 state lawmakers across the country, voted in Washington Friday, 29 states to eight states, in favor of supporting a nuclear freeze. Leaders of the nuclear freeze movement, whose goal is to freeze the U.S. and Soviet nuclear arsenals at present levels, have angrily denied similar previous statements by the president. American Civil Liberties Union official has accused Reagan of "McCarthyism."

The White House has cited articles in The Reader's Digest, Commentary and the American Spectator as documentation for Reagan's charge.

Reagan opposes the nuclear freeze on grounds that the Soviets have nuclear superiority and would be frozen with that advantage. He has called for sharp reductions in the arsenals of both countries.

"I say again that the millions of people who are supportive of that movement, I'm sure, are sincere and well-intentioned and from that standpoint that we share the same goals," he said. "I think a freeze would be just fine if we can get down first to equality between the two countries."

Rep. Edward Boland, D-Mass., chairman of the House Intelligence Committee, Thursday contradicted Reagan's assertions.

Secret FBI and CIA testimony from July said the Soviets are involved with Western European peace groups and a Soviet diplomat and KGB agents are attempting to influence U.S. activists.

Reagan's offer brings no answer from Poles

—WARSAW, Poland (UPI) — The Polish government has not been officially informed of President Reagan's offer-to-lift-sanctions-in return for an end to martial law in Poland, a government spokesman said Friday.

"The Foreign Ministry does not yet have an official text of Reagan's speech," government spokesman Jerzy Urban said. "All we have are news agency reports — nothing officially transmitted."

"We cannot present our opinion about something we haven't seen," he said. "So in this case the matter will probably be delayed until Monday. First we have to have a text of the statement, then somebody from the leadership must decide and we will publish our answer."

But a government official said there appeared to be "nothing new" in Reagan's offer and the U.S. government apparently did not realize the Solidarity union no longer exists.

"We cannot present our opinion about something we haven't seen," he said. "So in this case the matter will probably be delayed until Monday. First we have to have a text of the statement, then somebody from the leadership must decide and we will publish our answer."

Monday — the anniversary of martial law's imposition — to debate whether to lift or suspend the decree and to discuss the transfer of emergency law and order powers to the civilian government.

Parliament is expected to vote to lift or at least suspend martial law, probably starting from Dec. 23.

"Reagan's statement is no revelation," the government official said. "It repeats what he has said before many times. It is not a new step."

"By repeating the same conditions," the official said, "he is forcing the will of the U.S. government on our government, and our government has said many times it will not be forced into decisions by other governments."

The official called Reagan's move "a kind of insurance that we in no way might fulfill their expectations."

A source close to the Polish Roman Catholic church who acted as an adviser to Solidarity said, "I can only tell you this: If I were in charge in Poland, I would do what Reagan proposed. But because I am only a common, gray citizen, I can only dream about it."

The official Polish news agency PAP announced Wladyslaw Lorc, chief of state-run Polish Radio and Television, had been fired and replaced by Jerzy Baidor, a senior member of the broadcast management.

Lorc, who had hosted a biweekly program called "simple questions" that many viewers considered patronizing, was believed to have been the fourth head of Radio and Television in just over two years.

Husband of cyanide victim won't take lie detector test

SAN JOSE, Calif. (UPI) — The husband of a woman who suffered near-fatal poisoning from a cyanide-laced headache capsule changed his mind Friday and refused to take a lie detector test.

Officers said Richard Bowen, 29, has "contacted an attorney and changed his mind. We were told he is not going to take the polygraph test."

Police are treating the near-fatal poisoning Mrs. Sue Bowen, 30, as attempted murder. A spokesman said her husband is "not necessarily" a suspect.

The husband was interviewed at length by police and earlier offered to take a lie detector test. Police said they are not looking for him.

Mrs. Bowen has been hospitalized in critical condition since Nov. 26 when she reportedly took a single capsule from a bottle of Anacin III and became violently ill.

Doctors at first diagnosed her ailment as a stroke but a re-examination of blood samples determined Friday that her body had 10 times the usual level of cyanide when she was admitted to the hospital.

Mrs. Bowen was in stable condition but has suffered brain damage which has affected her speech, authorities at Good Samaritan Hospital said.

Police were looking for other possible victims of poisoning who may have been misdiagnosed.

It was her husband who alerted authorities to the possibility of poisoning by submitting capsules from a bottle of Anacin III for laboratory examination. Some of the capsules proved to be laced heavily with the poison.

Earlier Friday police said Bowen had agreed to take the lie test.

"We are now regarding this case as an attempted murder," Police Chief Joseph McNamara said. "We haven't ruled anyone out as a suspect."

Stores throughout California pulled Maximum Strength Anacin III from shelves when notified of the poisoning, which followed a pattern of product tampering begun in Chicago last September resulting in seven deaths and scores of "copycat" poisoning reports since.

The FBI, which joined the investigation Friday, said it was checking for a possible connection between the San Jose and Chicago poisonings.

McNamara said he was pulling officers off other cases to broaden the investigation into potential poisonings misdiagnosed as other illnesses.

"It may well be that other cases were missed if this case was missed," McNamara said.

Mrs. Bowen, who collapsed at her home on Nov. 26, spent two weeks in a hospital being treated for a suspected stroke before it was discovered there were poisoned capsules in her home, one of which she had swallowed, McNamara said.

The Bowen home was searched Thursday but no cyanide or other tainted products were found.

The original blood and urine samples of Mrs. Bowen were retested by a Los Angeles laboratory specifically for cyanide and 10 times above the acceptable levels were confirmed early Friday.

Mrs. Bowen remained in critical condition at Good Samaritan Hospital and until four days ago was in intensive care. She has improved and on Friday doctors said she was nearly ready to go home.

Doctors said she had trouble swallowing and pronouncing words clearly, which indicated brain stem damage. The injuries would require prolonged speech and occupational therapy, they said.

The Food and Drug Administration checked for product tampering in all stores within a five mile radius of the Long's Drug store where the Bowens purchased the Anacin on Nov. 24 or 25, said FDA investigator Fred Norman, but no tampering was found.

When Bowen took the capsules to the hospital "he was told there was nothing wrong with them," by doctors there, McNamara said.

Lawmakers to raise drinking age

By LORI SANTOS
United Press International

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sponsors of a proposed national drinking age of 21 Friday urged 35 states to raise the District of Columbia to... raise minimum drinking ages — saying that otherwise, Congress may force the issue.

Rep. William F. Goodling, D-Pa., said a House bill asking states to raise the age for drinking and purchasing alcoholic beverages to 21 would reduce alcohol-related traffic deaths.

Rep. Bill Nelson, D-Fla., said Congress might make the age mandatory if states do not do it voluntarily.

"We're ready to make a full effort with mandatory legislation if we haven't seen states conform by late spring," Nelson said. "We'll be watching them closely."

Jim Burnett, chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board, said about 5,000 people aged 15-24 die annually in alcohol-related traffic accidents and another 130,000 are injured.

"We can save at least 1,250 lives a year by taking this step, and up to 5,000," Burnett said.

President Reagan recently signed into law a bill to provide $125 million in grants to states that strengthen their drunken-driving laws.

Rep. Michael Barnes, D-Md., a member of President Reagan's Commission on Drunk Driving, said the commission would recommend to Reagan Monday that the drinking age be raised to 21.

"We are getting the word out to state legislatures that it's time to act on this," Barnes said. "There is no reason for these children to die."

Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., has sponsored a similar bill in the Senate.

"It is not an effort to limit the freedom of 18-, 19- and 20-year-olds, but an effort to protect them," he said.

The New Jersey legislature is expected to vote Monday on raising the drinking age to 21.

Goodling said he hopes to get the bill before the House next week, since "Drunken Driving Awareness Week" begins Monday.

Jetliner wings house

NEW YORK (UPI) — A 12-foot wing flap section of a passenger jet approaching LaGuardia Airport for landing fell off and clipped the roof of a home below, damaging the roof, TV antenna and back fence, police said Friday.

No one on the ground or on the Delta Airlines L-1011 jumbo jet, carrying 233 passengers and a crew of 13, was injured, officials said.

The trailing edge of the wing flap, measuring 12 feet by 22 inches, plummeted onto the home of Joseph Natale — in Queens — about 10 p.m. Thursday.

House panel votes contempt citation

By JOHN F. BARTON
United Press International

WASHINGTON — A House committee voted 24-11 Friday in favor of citing Anne Gorsuch, the Environmental Protection Agency chief, for contempt of Congress — setting the stage for a constitutional clash with the White House.

The Public Works and Transportation Committee approved a subpoenaed documents the panel wants.

The documents are involved in the panel's investigation of charges EPA is not holding major chemical companies liable for their full share of cleanup costs at some major hazardous waste dump sites.

Republican Rep. Guy Molinari of New York voted with 27 Democrats in favor of the citation. Five Republicans voted "present."

The last person cited for contempt of Congress was Honcho Kinn, a lieutenant to Tongusson Kinn, a September 1978. The House overwhelmingly approved the contempt recommendation of the House Select Committee on Intelligence, which was investigating the Korean influence-buying scandal.

In a contempt situation, the House on its own may fine a person $100 to $1,000 and may imprison someone up to a year without further appeal. Or, as in the Kinn case, it may refer the matter to the Justice Department for prosecution.

"It is really discouraging to EPA's hazardous waste enforcement efforts for the Public Works and Transportation Committee to cite me for contempt, but I am no less committed to preserving the confidentiality of EPA's law enforcement files," Mrs. Gorsuch said in a statement.

"President Reagan specifically directed that these sensitive documents be protected from disclosure. I agree with that directive and shall carry it out," she said.

The EPA chief said the withheld documents "are sensitive because they contain information which, if disclosed, would hamper our law enforcement efforts."

Chairman James Howard, D-N.J., said Reagan's executive privilege claim "does not involve a demand for documents the president has or will see or documents generated in relation to advice received from his close aides."

"Ours is a government of laws," Howard said. "The Congress has constitutional responsibilities to hold accountable officers of the executive for performance or nonperformance of their statutory duties. That really is the issue today."

Last week, a subcommittee headed by Rep. Elliott Levitas, D-Ga., recommended 9-2 that Mrs. Gorsuch be cited for contempt.

She said that Reagan had ordered her not to provide Congress some sensitive, subpoenaed documents on hazardous waste site cleanups around the nation.

Mrs. Gorsuch agreed to provide other documents the panel subpoenaed, which she said include 787,000 pages that would fill 52 filing cabinets.

But she refused to provide at least 23 documents she said would damage the agency's legal proceedings in cleanup cases if made public.

She said those documents contained "analyses of cases that reveal weaknesses in our information or legal position. If these became public, nothing could be more useful to the defendants than that information."

Key Social Security vote postponed

By D'VERA COHN
United Press International

WASHINGTON — The deadlocked Social Security Commission Friday postponed for a week a vote on the president and House speaker will work out an agreement in the meantime.

"It is clear there is still some movement in discussions of the issues," said economist Allan Greenspan, the commission chairman, as the panel opened what was to have been its last meeting.

Greenspan said the commission will gather "hopefully for our last meeting" next Friday. Other members said they hope President Reagan and Speaker Thomas O'Neill will meet to work out agreement on the tough issue. Without a political signal from the top, they said, there is little hope the commission can agree on specifics to keep Social Security solvent.

"We're a long way from getting together," commission member Joe Waggoner said after the panel wrapped up its Republican and Democratic morning caucuses and sat down to a private lunch in a Senate meeting room.

The National Commission on Social Security Reform, agreed that the system needs up to $200 billion by 1990, is still split into political camps. Liberals want to raise most of the money through payroll tax hikes; conservatives want to do it by trimming benefits.

The 15-member bipartisan commission was set up by Reagan last year to come up with a plan to save the retirement system from financial insolvency. Congress will have to act on the commission's report, due Dec. 31.

Commission-Republicans, saying they need a signal from the top, Friday renewed their call for Reagan and O'Neill to meet and agree on changes they would support. The White House has said there are no plans for a summit session.

But Sen. William Armstrong, R-Colo., said, "There is optimism about some behind-the-scenes negotiations."

Greenspan, who has close White House ties, would not say whether he will push for a meeting. But Armstrong said of Greenspan, "He would do what he thinks has to be done."

Unless O'Neill and Reagan meet, said Armstrong, most of what we can do, said Armstrong, a conservative who chairs the Senate Social Security subcommittee. "We're perfectly willing to meet again if there's some cause — if there's some sense the speaker and president can put a deal together."

"We're waiting to see whether Republicans and the White House come up with any solution to this terrible problem they're telling the country about," said chairman Claude Pepper, D-Fla., of the House Committee on Aging.

Auto plant furloughs a record

By MICHELINE MAYNARD
UPI Auto Writer

DETROIT — Domestic automakers will have 265,763 workers on indefinite layoff next week, a record for the current three-year slump, the companies said Friday.

The layoffs are up 3,695 from this week's 22,074, the old record. Next week will be the fourth straight week in which a record is set for the slump. The all-time record is over 300,000, set in 1974.

Temporary layoffs will be 11,550 next week, compared to 21,400 this week.

Adding to already reported layoff figures were American Motors Corp. and Volkswagen of America.

AMC will have the same 2,450 workers on indefinite layoff as this week. It will have no temporary layoffs. VW, however, will have 220 workers on temporary layoff at its South Charleston, W.Va. plant.

VW will have 1,600 workers on indefinite layoff.

On Thursday, General Motors Corp. said it will have a record 170,000 workers on indefinite layoff next week, up 3,000 from this week's record.

GM said its layoffs will increase to 170,000 from the current 167,000 due to additional layoffs at components plants. This is a new high for the No. 1 automaker.

GM will have 2,500 workers on temporary layoff next week.

Ford Motor Co. said it will have 49,019 workers on indefinite layoff, up from 48,824 this week. The No. 2 automaker said it will have 3,500 workers on temporary layoff.

Chrysler Corp. said it will have 42,600 workers on indefinite layoff, up 400 from this week. The No. 3 automaker planned to have 5,300 workers on temporary layoff.

However, 4,800 of those layoffs are due to the Canadian strike. Should a new contract be approved this weekend, they would be called back sometime next week. A Chrysler spokesman said he did not know what day those workers would be recalled.

Sign setters want home

ALLENTOWN, Pa. (UPI) — Plumming temperatures and predictions of snow Friday failed to prompt any of three men camped on a billboard catwalk in hopes of winning an $18,000 mobile home.

"As the 12th week of the encampment drew to a close, Dallas Young, 22, described the contest as a 'sort of grudge match.'"

"I try to break these guys down with mental telepathy," Young said of the others — Mike MacKay, 30, and Ron Kistler, 25.

The trio set up housekeeping Sept. 20 on a billboard adjacent to Interstate 78, the start of a struggle to win the mobile home by outlasting the competition.

Young said living conditions on his 6-by-16-foot space did not compare too badly with some situations he endured in the Army. He was discharged last summer.

Educations standards will get hearing

By STEVEN CHRISTENSEN
United Press International

BOISE — The state Board of Education agreed Friday to hold public hearings next month on a proposal to tighten requirements for graduating from Idaho high schools by increasing the number of credits required for graduation.

Board members, acting on a recommendation earlier this year from the Commission on Excellence in Education, agreed to take public comment on the issue before any final decision is made.

A specific date in January and a location for the hearing will be set in the near future, a board spokesman said.

The commission has suggested that the credits required for graduation be lifted from 36 to 40 beginning with the class of 1988. In addition, it said students should be required to take more courses in fundamental subjects such as science and English, and fewer electives.

Commission members also recommended Idaho's open admissions policy at its universities be replaced with entrance qualifications based on such things as high school performance and aptitude tests.

The board of education said it would act first on the credits issue, probably early next year.

On another subject, the board turned down on a narrow 5-3 vote an attempt to transfer 1.5 square miles of land from the Meadows Valley School District to the McCall-Donnelly District.

Meadows Valley Superintendent Will Spaulding said the transfer would further damage his district's already-crippled financial situation by removing tax base and students.

But those favoring the action, including one family in the affected area and Idaho Superintendent of Public Instruction Jerry Evans, said Spaulding's district would make up much of the lost funds in increased state support.

Evans was joined by board members Nels Solberg of Grangeville and Janet Hay of Nampa in voting for the proposed transfer.

Board members also directed the state's textbook committee responsible for purchasing classroom books for Idaho's public schools — to answer complaints from a Cascade group that the panel does not accurately reflect the wishes of taxpayers.

Leah Coash, spokeswoman for the "Snow Bowl" Chapel, recommended that one-third of the committee be comprised of parents living in the district. She also said parents should have access to a list of all books used in the district.

And Ms. Coash said the committee's policy should be altered to restrict use of textbooks promoting "secular humanism" — a non-religious system of personal ethics.

On other issues presented to the board Friday, members:

— Agreed to allow Lewis-Clark State College in Lewiston to purchase land for campus expansion from Mrs. and Mr. Homer Hubenthal. The land, priced at $52,000, includes two housing units for married students.

— Authorized officials at the University of Idaho to sign documents finalizing a $1.5 million settlement of a lawsuit brought by the college against those responsible for constructing the leak-plagued Kibbie Dome athletic center.

— Formally accepted the resignation of Executive Director Milton Small and named Charles McQuillen — dean of the College of Business at the University of Idaho — as Small's replacement.

— Set a March 2 public hearing date for comment on options facing the board regarding the funding of intercollegiate athletics at public colleges and universities.

— Heard a report from the director of Idaho's newly consolidated public television system, Jack Schlaefle said the consolidation of the state's three public TV outlets has been working well. But a Moscow resident, Warren O'Brien, complained the system overemphasizes southern Idaho events and issues and underplays those important in the north.

— Directed Boise State University to proceed with a plan setting up a new vocational training course to prepare students for careers in the semi-conductor industry.

Much of the program costs will be funded by a Boise semi-conductor firm — Micron-Tech — and other companies also plan to subsidize the classes, said BSU President John Kelsner.

Kelsner said up to 20 students would begin classes under the new program next month.

Board member Dr. Leno Seppi of Lava Hot Springs said industries have an increased responsibility to help colleges train students for vocational careers in light of dwindling federal support and tight education funds.

Evans wants Ward to stay with PUC

BOISE (UPI) — Gov. John Evans announced Friday he will nominate Idaho Public Utilities Commissioner Conley Ward to another six-year term.

In what is expected to be a controversial appointment.

Ward, whom Evans appointed to the panel in 1977, must receive confirmation by the state Senate, which will take up the matter at the beginning of the 1983 legislative session, said Jean Terra, Evans' spokeswoman.

Ward said he was pleased Evans will submit his name to the state Senate, although he is not sure he will serve the complete term.

"Obviously, at least it feels good to have the governor's endorsement," Ward said.

Ward, a Democrat, said he explained to the Democratic governor that he could not promise to complete another term because six years "is a long time."

"It's just that you want to leave room for yourself to do something else if you burn out and feel you can't work at the pace required anymore," the 35-year-old commissioner said.

Sen. Reed Budge, R-Soda Springs, said he expected the appointment would spark controversy because it is a gubernatorial appointment to an agency in which the Legislature is interested.

"It has in the past (been controversial), and I don't think it will change," said Budge, former senate president. "I think the Legislature always looks at these appointments closely, and I don't expect this would be different."

Senate President Jim Risch, R-Boise, said he also thinks the appointment will generate controversy, but he noted that Ward won Senate approval the first time he was appointed.

"His batting average isn't too bad, but I'm sure there will be an examination of the way he performed," Risch said. "There's been a little talk about it, but not a whole lot. I would say any time there is an appointment to the PUC it generally entails controversy, probably because they act in a quasi-legislative capacity, and we're the biggest critics of ourselves."

Group pushes for reactor

BOISE (UPI) — A memo from a Boise utility and a presentation by several labor unions helped a group of Idaho State residents try to persuade federal officials to build a nuclear reactor in eastern Idaho, a group member said Friday.

Ann Rydahl, head of an Idaho Falls pro-nuclear committee, said Department of Energy Secretary-designate Don Hodel assured her he would take into account the group's comments when he recommends to President Reagan where the military reactor should be built.

Rydahl and several others met with federal officials earlier this week to point out the advantages of building the planned reactor at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory.

A blue-ribbon committee of scientists has recommended the $4 billion facility be built at Savannah River, S.C., while the eastern Idaho site ranked near the bottom of the list of potential locations.

"We want them to realize the capability of Idaho, and the fact that INEL is very capable from the professional standpoint in handling something like a new production reactor," Ms. Rydahl said in a telephone interview.

"We felt like we wanted better than an honorable mention. They were very receptive."

She said Hodel seemed particularly interested in a memo from Idaho Power Co. top executives who promised to try to form a consortium of utilities to buy steam from the reactor.

The steam would be used to generate electricity, and the resulting revenues would help hold down the cost of the reactor, officials have said.

Ms. Rydahl said Hodel seemed "very interested" in the Dec. 8 memo from top Idaho Power officials, although the blue-ribbon report said outfitting the reactor to produce steam would be too costly.

Also of interest was a presentation by several labor union representatives, who assured Hodel they were able to provide the skills needed to construct the proposed reactor, she said.

Hodel wanted to know whether the eastern Idaho area could handle an influx of people who would be needed to work at the site, she said.

She said the group told him the increased numbers of people probably would scatter among numerous surrounding communities rather than concentrating in one town, as is currently the case with INEL workers.

INEL received a top ranking by the blue-ribbon panel because members said the site had no experience in building in military facilities.

The reactor would be used to produce tritium for the nation's nuclear stockpile.

State says Creech should be moved

BOISE (UPI) — A deputy state attorney general argued before a Fourth District judge Friday that mass murderer Thomas Creech should be transferred from his cell in the Ada county jail to the Idaho State Penitentiary.

Mark Shuster, attorney for the Idaho Board of Corrections, said the state made a motion to move Creech to the penitentiary south of Boise for security reasons.

"It's the position of the state that Mr. Creech will be more securely housed at the Idaho State Correctional Institute," Shuster said.

Prison warden Darrol Gardner said officials also want the inmate transferred to the penitentiary in case the state Supreme Court rules he should be executed.

Although Creech has received the death penalty, the sentence is automatically appealed to the state's highest court.

Gardner said if Creech loses his appeal, it would be simpler to execute him, if he was already housed at the penitentiary.

Creech, a convicted murderer, was moved to the county jail after the May 13, 1981 murder of prison inmate Dale Jensen.

He later pleaded guilty to the killing — the fourth time he was convicted on murder charges.

Ada County Prosecutor Jim Harris said he argued that Creech should remain at the county jail because "it's clear from the record that Ada County can control Creech."

He said the county can do so better than officials at the state penitentiary, as was proven by the fact Creech killed another inmate while at the prison.

WPPSS won't get bailed out

Councilmen say

EVERETT, Wash. (UPI) — The 88 Northwest public-utilities-owning shares of a $7 billion debt in two abandoned nuclear projects shouldn't count on help from the state, the federal government or California, warn members of the Northwest Power Planning Council.

"Any belief based on trying to effect a bailout or regionalization of the debt is mistaken," Charles Collins, a Washington member of the council, told the annual meeting of the Washington-Public-Utility Districts Association Thursday.

Collins and fellow council members Germal Mueller of Montana and Bob Saxvik of Idaho generally dismissed suggestions that a utilities tax could be passed by the Legislature to spread the cost of the terminated Washington Public Power Supply System plants to non-participating utilities.

"I don't think there is anything out there. You have only two choices: pay or default," Collins said. "I realize this is unjust. Somehow a small portion of the region got left holding the bag. But I think you're the only ones to deal with it."

Meanwhile, Gov. John Spellman has confirmed he is supportive of two possible alternatives to the alignment of long-term power contracts with California utilities to help pay for the plants and the possible sale of one of the plants to the federal government for use as a plutonium factory.

WPPSS has hired Charles Luce, retired chairman of Consolidated Edison, to seek a California sales agreement. But Collins noted that the Bonneville Power Administration already has a surplus-of-power-it-is-trying to sell to the southwest.

Saxvik said there is "little or no chance" his state would pass a utility tax to help bail out PUDs backing the failed WNP-4 and WNP-5.

"The legislative attitude would be unwelcome," he said. "Ours is basically a private-utility state. The public power load is less than 20 percent of the ratepayers."

Mueller said legislative action in Montana was equally unlikely since "only five small electrical cooperatives" in his state own shares in the WPPSS plants.

The meeting was marked by an announcement by Stanton "Nick" Cain, the president of the WPPSS Executive Board, that he would resign his post at the end of Friday's board meeting in Seattle. One WPPSS observer predicted Carl Halvorsen, a Portland contractor, would replace Cain.

The meeting also was marked by verbal tongue-lashings given to nuclear power critics by two champions of nuclear power, Everett Mayor Bill Moore and APPA President Jim Baker.

Moore said the opposition posed to WPPSS and the proposed utilities tax by "ratepayers' groups amounted to 'a challenge by insignificant people' and 'unknown ego-seeking people, a radical element who don't fit into their community.'"

"I submit that no one made a mistake," said Baker. "We did not overbuild. Those plants were designed to meet loads that were forecast at the time."

"So-called experts are coming out of the woodwork and attaching blame for what has happened to your WPPSS plants and other projects around the country," Baker said, naming such persons "neophytes and demagogues."

He said economists "can't even manage their own field while they're telling us what to do," and added that "the academicians are running a school system that is a national disgrace."

Oregon Trail to live again

By United Press International

Modern visitors could relive the pioneer experience under a National Park Service plan that would protect and develop portions of the historic Oregon Trail, the primary route used to settle the West.

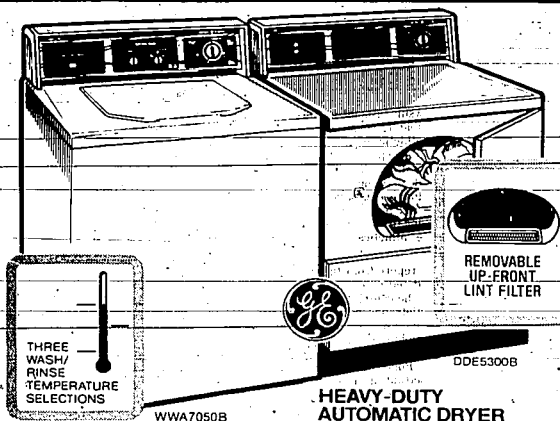

The plan recommends preservation of about 318 miles of the trail in Idaho, Wyoming and Oregon — 15 percent of the 2,170-mile historic road that opened the Oregon Territory to a flood of up to 300,000 settlers.

Congress ordered the Park Service plan, completed last March, but has not decided whether to appropriate any money for the renovation, which could cost as much as $150,000 in Idaho alone.

The agency said portions of the trail should be developed as hiking or horseback-riding trails with visitor centers and historic sites to recreate the pioneer experience.

The plan includes two Idaho trail remnants totaling 100 miles between Boise and Glens Ferry.

Other shorter portions remain in the Gem State, but most of the trail has been obliterated by development of new highways, said Wally Meyers, recreation program director for the Boise District of the Bureau of Land Management.

What's what

Q. I've read there's something not quite right about unattached men who go to matrimonial agencies for prospective wives. About 75 percent of them supposedly are neurotic. Is this also true of the women who go to such agencies?

A. Evidently not. Far more male than female Lonely Hearts applicants are neurotic, according to our Love and War man's files. A non-profit outfit called The Marriage Society of Great Britain checked out numerous firms set up to bring isolated people together. Its findings confirmed that 75 percent — imagine that, only 75 percent! — of the male applicants were neurotic. That may beat the general average, don't you know.

TOTTUXEDO
Expected on the market shortly: Tuxedos at $32 a piece for children aged three months to two years.

Q. What's the most commonly used redundancy of all?
A. Our Language man must guess: "basic fundamentals."

Some historians say the potato only became popular as a food many generations ago after innocent gossips spread the erroneous notion that it was a sex stimulant.

Q. Is a man's hairpiece tax deductible?
A. If a doctor verifies it's necessary for the wearer's mental health, yes.

Wild alligators don't eat in the winter.

BETTER TO HAVE LOVED

To that list of reconditioned proverbs, please add: "It's better to have loved and lost — much better."

Q. Does anybody have blood of a color other than red?
A. Not any human. Even so, most of the blood in this world is sort of creamy green.

Did I mention each of the major African soccer teams has its own witch doctor? They heal well, some of them.

Two thirds of the divorcees are demanded by the wives.

About 15 percent of the population lives lifelong in the same county.

DUBIOUS ACHIEVERS

Esquire magazine's annual "Dubious Achievements" awards will be on the newstands Dec. 20, but here's an advance peek at some of them: Career Change of the Year — John DeLorean. The David Begelman North Badge, a former Girl Scout leader, Alida Creek Alexander, 26, of Montgomery, Ala., who admitted stealing $720 in cookie money. Endless Nosh: Sculptor Dwight Kalb, who sculpted a statue of Brooke Shields for a Chicago restaurant — in chopped liver.

POET PICKED

Richard Eberhart, Pulitzer-prize winning poet, joins economist John Kenneth Galbraith and writers Peter De Vries and Peter Taylor in four of the 50 chairs of the American Academy of Arts and Letters. Eberhart, retired poet-in-residence at Dartmouth College, says he favors Plato over Aristotle, because Plato threw poets out of the academy of their time, fearing their "divine madness." Eberhart said he "thus paid poets his highest compliment."

ROYAL "E.T." SHOW

Princess Diana and Prince Charles cried at the British premiere of "E.T." when they thought the extraterrestrial was dying. The film's director, Steven Spielberg, said so at the showing, and it was confirmed by Harrison Ford, who also was in the audience. "I needed my hankies,"

Deanna Phillips wants money from husband Edward

CHRISTMAS MONEY

Like everybody else, Deanna Phillips needs extra cash in the holiday season. She wants it from her estranged millionaire husband Edward J. Phillips, son of advice columnist Abigail VanBuren. "My client needs money for the holidays," her lawyer, Marvin Mitchellson, said Thursday in Minneapolis. He said the money could be subtracted from whatever the court awards her. Mrs.

Phillips is asking $19,000 a month in temporary support for herself and the couple's two sons.

NO SUPERSTAR

James Mace doesn't mind not being that newfangled invention, the "superstar." He said on "Live At Five" on WNBC-TV, New York: "Nowadays, anybody who is associated with a big smash hit immediately becomes a superstar ... not too long ago there were a couple of ice hockey players who looked as if they would begin their movie careers already being called superstars ... so consequently, it doesn't bother me much not to be thought of as a superstar."

Mystery woman makes donation

INDIANAPOLIS (UPI) — A mystery woman who annually drops large amounts of money in Salvation Army kettles has struck again, this year dropping thousands of dollars in folded bills into downtown kettles. "All of a sudden this woman walks up, opens her purse and began stuffing money in the slot on top of the kettles," said volunteer bellringer Sandy Judkins after the unidentified woman made her deposit Wednesday. "She was a conservatively dressed lady, maybe in her late 40s."

Mrs. Judkins, an Indianapolis Power & Light Co. employee, said she did not pay much attention at first. "I could see she had the bills folded into little squares, but then I noticed one of them was a crisp $100 bill," she said. "I looked again and discovered they were all $100 bills."

Mrs. Judkins said the woman "just smiled and said I shouldn't worry. She said she did this every year but usually divided the money among several bellringers. She said this morning she couldn't find any of the others so she was giving it all to me."

Parents start journey to spare child's life

By BARNBY LERTEN
United Press International

FLORENCE, Ore. — Karla Lundeen says her daughter Brooke is "your regular, gung-ho, above-average" 2½-year old, except for one thing: an ailing liver that will kill her in childhood unless a transplant donor can be found.

The bright, happy little girl and her parents, Ed and Karla Lundeen, were leaving their home in the Oregon coastal city of Florence Friday on a long journey they hope will save the child's life.

The family will board a plane early Saturday for Pittsburgh, where Brooke is to enter Presbyterian Children's Hospital Monday for tests to evaluate her suitability for a liver transplant operation.

The little girl suffers from incurable biliary atresia, a condition that affects one in 10,000 children who are born with an obstruction of the bile ducts.

The Lundeens know that if their daughter's liver is not replaced, the cirrhosis caused by the accumulation of bile will destroy the organ and she will die before reaching adulthood.

"I don't think she really knows what's going on," Mrs. Lundeen said. "She knows she's going to ride on an airplane. She doesn't realize she's sick."

Indeed, Brooke is in better health than most children who suffer the disease, although she has had three operations and continuing problems. One of the operations was part of her intestine to create an artificial bile duct, helping her liver to keep functioning, but did not eliminate the ailment.

Having survived a severe calcium deficiency that almost killed her at the age of six months, the only noticeable signs of Brooke's sickness are a slightly enlarged stomach and a yellow tinge to her skin from the jaundice caused when a liver malfunctions.

Few children needing a liver live to be as big as 32-pound Brooke, a fact her parents hope will make it easier to find a donor liver.

"We've followed liver transplants from the day she was diagnosed as having the disease," Mrs. Lundeen said. "There's a lot of really small infants who did make it to Brooke's age — not as many her size need a liver."

The Lundeens also were encouraged by the successful liver transplant performed on 1-year-old Jamie Flak in Minneapolis, which made headlines across the country.

Lundeen's insurance will cover much of the costs, but trust funds have been started for Brooke in Florence, Eugene and Portland. Already, in three months, the Florence fund has risen to $6,000 and Mrs. Lundeen said she was "very, very surprised."

"It seems like the words 'Thank you' aren't enough," she said.

Clark recovering, doctor critical of transplant

By MICHAEL WHITNEY
United Press International

SALT LAKE CITY — Artificial heart recipient Barney Clark showed only slight improvement Friday in his struggle to regain mental alertness and Texas heart surgeon Denton Cooley attacked Utah doctors for doing the implant.

Cooley, the first doctor to use an artificial heart in a human, criticized the Utah team headed by surgeon William DeVries for using the Jarvik-7 plastic pump as a permanent replacement for Clark's heart.

Cooley, chief surgeon, of the Texas Heart

Institute, has used artificial hearts twice — in 1969 and again last year — but only as a temporary step to keep his patients alive while he found donors for human transplants. Both patients died shortly after receiving transplants.

"I don't think the artificial heart is ready now for permanent implantation," he told a news conference in Houston. "Do you think it would have been appropriate in 1960 to put John Glenn in a rocket and head him off to the moon?"

"We believe the appropriate first use of artificial hearts is to obtain life until a donor can be found," he said. "It is our safety net."

The news conference coincided with the publication of a letter from Cooley in the American Medical News in which he said the Utah team had not studied the Texas patients of "they would have been convinced that the artificial heart is not ready."

But Clark would have died without the transplant, said Dr. H. Chase Peterson, University of Utah vice president for health science. He said the 61-year-old Seattle-area dentist is too old to be eligible for the federal program. Most transplant programs have a cutoff age of 50.

Dr. Cooley differs with us on the advisability of using the artificial heart in a human patient," said Peterson. "He's taken an honorable position and so have we; it remains to be seen whether he's correct or we are correct."

Peterson said Clark's plastic heart — along with his kidneys, lungs, liver and bowels — were working fine Friday. But his brain was still causing some concern for doctors.

But Clark remained in critical condition recovering from the implant surgery 10 days ago and a series of seizures on Tuesday.

"His heart is working beautifully," said Peterson. "The critical thing here is not his lungs, his liver or his toenails. It's his head."

"He is not as alert. He was able to correspond in sentences before the seizures and now he just mumbles words around the (respirator) tube."

Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh adds to his fleet

Guru birthday marked with 2 Rolls-Royces

RAJNEESH PURAM, Ore. (UPI) — Disciples of Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh, the Indian mystic whose followers have turned an Oregon ranch into a city-commune, plan to give their master two new Rolls-Royces — his 24th and 25th — for his birthday.

Rajneesh, who will turn 51 Saturday, will receive the cars at a "darsan" celebration expected to draw 2,000 of the faithful to the commune.

"Darsan means receiving the blessing of the master," said Ma Prem Veeha, a spokeswoman for the sect, which claims over 250,000 followers worldwide.

Rajneesh, whose followers came to the 100-square-mile ranch 18 months ago, is believed to be the largest single collector in the world at this time of the $100,000-plus luxury cars.

Rolls-Royce officials have said.

The cars, the disciples stress, are actually held by the Rajneesh Investment Corp., though the guru is the only one known to use them regularly.

"We are going to (keep giving Rolls-Royces) until people get tired of them and realize the joke of it all," said Ma Prem Veeha, another spokeswoman. "People are so obsessed with the material part that they don't look at what is important."

"We love the man ... and those Rolls-Royces are nothing compared to what the man is offering the world. This world has its values upside down. It values 10 Rolls-Royces more than happiness or love or things I consider more important."

The festivities will include music and dancing, she said.

Assaulted justice

Jury says Estes is guilty

By RALPH WAKLEY
United Press International

SALT LAKE CITY — A Utah man who repeatedly slugged Associate Justice Byron White to protest U.S. Supreme Court bus and pornography rulings was convicted of assault Friday by a federal court jury.

The 6-man, 6-woman jury deliberated about two hours before finding Newton Estes, 57, of Kaysville, Utah, guilty. Estes had admitted planning and carrying out the attack to protest recent school bus and pornography rulings by the high court.

Federal Judge David Winder scheduled a Jan. 14th sentencing date for Estes. And, Winder urged Estes to meet with his attorney before being interviewed by federal probation officials. The judge said he will rely "heavily" on the probation report in determining Estes' sentence.

"You didn't use a weapon, and that's certainly wonderful," Winder said. "But, this kind of conduct has no place in our system. It is absolutely ridiculous."

The Utah man faces a maximum possible sentence of three years in prison, plus a $5,000 fine.

Defense attorney Ronald Yenglich said he will "wait until after the sentencing" before discussing a possible appeal with Estes.

The assault took place in Salt Lake City during a July 15 convention of the Utah State Bar, where White was the keynote speaker.

Estes told FBI agents he attacked White "to get arrested and to have a jury trial during which the issue of pornography and foul language on television and the issue of forced busing would be presented to the jury."

But, Winder said the only issue that could be argued during the 3-day trial was whether Estes had attacked White. The judge said his court would not be "turned into a stage for propagandizing political views."

Estes did not testify during the trial and Yenglich did not call any defense witnesses. The attorney argued unsuccessfully that the case was a matter of civil assault since White was not acting in his official capacity as a Supreme Court justice and the court was not in session at the time of the attack.

Prosecution witnesses had testified they saw Estes slug White at least three times before he could be restrained.

Lawyer files NFL suit

SACRAMENTO (UPI) — A Sacramento attorney who specializes in million dollar civil lawsuits has filed a $10 million dollar class-action lawsuit against the National Football League.

All Mort Friedman wants is the interest the NFL earned during the 57-day football strike on the pre-sold season ticket sales. Friedman estimates that amounts to about $10 million.

He convinced his friend, Frank Ramos, an oil company executive, to become the chief plaintiff in the legal action he filed Thursday in Sacramento Superior Court.

"It's not the principle. It's the interest," Friedman said. "We're not haggling. We're just asking for the principle."

Named as defendants in the case are the 28 NFL teams, which have offered to refund the ticket price, or apply the refund to next season's tickets.

"The beauty of a class action lawsuit is this: To one individual, the interest due doesn't mean much at all. The individual fan couldn't afford to file a lawsuit because he has only two or four tickets or whatever," Friedman said.

"But when you join it together, we're talking about $100 million these guys have had the use of during the strike — and that's a lot of dough."

Appointments brew controversy

By MARTY TRILLHAASE
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Judy Felton of Buhl, the newly elected Twin Falls County commissioner, may have to live with a series of appointments about to be made. In part, by her retiring predecessor, Meri Leonard of Filer.

The procedure, which occasionally is called "midnight appointments," appears to be a traditional one, although some county zoning board members are unhappy about it.

In all, the county commissioners will fill the zoning board positions now held by Marilyn Butler of Buhl, Jim Wheeler of Castleford and Annette Jenkins of Twin Falls. The county commissioners also will appoint new people to the hospital board seats held by Col Butler of Buhl and Clarence Hoffield and Everett Norris, both of Hansen.

So far, the move has attracted some criticism from zoning board members, who say their terms will not expire until Leonard steps down on Jan. 10, 1983.

Marilyn Butler contends that the terms for the zoning positions expire on Jan. 11, 1982, and as such, Commissioner-elect Felton, not Leonard, should have a voice in making the appointments.

"I thought, that's nice. Whoever is in office on Jan. 11 has authority to replace me," she says. "Then, I got this letter from the county commissioners stating that my term expired in December, and they were going to proceed to pick someone to replace me."

And Jenkins says that she has remained on the board specifically to give Felton an opportunity to fill the seat.

"After it became apparent that there would be at least one new member on the county commission in 1983, I had decided to stay on and not resign last summer," Jenkins said Friday. "What concerns me the most is, I think it's a slap in the face to the new county commissioner, who has expertise and experience in zoning in the Buhl area, and I think she should have input on the board members."

Butler has asked Prosecutor Harry DeHaan to determine when the terms do, in fact, expire, and which county commissioners are entitled to make the appointments.

So far, DeHaan has not found any legal answers.

"I haven't been able to find a definitive statute," DeHaan said Friday. "That doesn't mean there isn't one there; it just means I haven't found it."

Felton is maintaining a respectful distance from the dispute, although she says she would expect to have a voice in making the appointments if Butler and Jenkins are correct.

"If the appointments do, in fact, not expire until the 11th of January, I would like to be able to make the appointments on the 10th of January," she says.

However, Felton says she has no right to inject herself into the process until Jan. 10. Nor have the county commissioners asked her to do so.

"I haven't been contacted at all by any of the county commissioners about it. So I don't have any official information," Felton says. "That is the privilege of the present three county commissioners to decide if they want to consult with me at this present time or not."

For their part, the county commissioners say they are not doing anything unusual. Appointments are made in December, at the time when terms expire, says commission Chairman Ann Cover. The appointments are announced in January, she says.

"It was that way when I came on. They were appointed when I got here. Same with Mr. (former Commissioner Tommy Walker—and Mr. (Commissioner Marvin) Hempleman," she says. "It was that way when I came on." •See APPOINTMENTS on Page A14

Still alive

Prospective malls for Twin Falls still on the drawing boards

By STEPHANIE SCHOROW
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Three mall developers remained locked in a stand-off over which company will be first to build in Twin Falls.

Two of the three companies, Price Development Corp. and Woodbury Corp., both of Salt Lake City, each say they remain committed to building a shopping mall in Twin Falls, and that construction will start after legal or economic barriers are overcome.

The Times-News was unable to get a statement from the Iowa-based General Growth Corp., which announced plans in 1980 to build a mall on the Oren Boone property, northeast of the Blue Lakes Boulevard North-Pole Line Road intersection.

Representatives of all three companies have said that Twin Falls can financially support only one of the three proposed malls.

A suit between Price and the city of Twin Falls over the zoning of the company's proposed mall site is pending before the Idaho Supreme Court. The site is next to the Green Acres subdivision, just west of Blue Lakes Boulevard North.

At dispute is the zoning designation of seven acres of land included in the 30-acre site. The seven acres are zoned for residential use; the rest is zoned for commercial use. City officials denied Price's request to rezone the seven acres after receiving protests from Green Acres subdivision residents.

Price filed suit against the city, saying the denial was arbitrary and capricious. In September of 1981, Fifth District Judge Douglas Kramer ruled in favor of Price.

The city appealed Kramer's decision to the Idaho Supreme Court, and the case was argued in April. The court has yet to issue a final ruling.

Robert Paine, a Twin Falls attorney representing Price, said Thursday that Price remains "very serious" about developing the mall.

If the Supreme Court issues a decision in the company's favor, "we will immediately start the steps" toward development, he said.

If the high court rules against Price, the company will look for another mall site in Twin Falls, Paine said.

Paine contends that Price is "way ahead of anyone considering a mall."

He said three major chains have made commitments to open a branch in the Price mall; but Paine would not give the names of the chains. But he listed several that may be among those committed: J.C. Penney, Sears and Roebuck, The Bon and ZCMI.

Although the popularity of shopping malls has declined in other parts of the country, both Twin Falls and Boise remain prime locations, Paine said.

Rick Woodbury said his company is "moving ahead" on the mall project, although "we don't have anything earth-shattering to report."

"With the economy improving, 'we're very much committed to the project,'" he said.

Woodbury has announced plans to build a mall on the John Breckenridge property, southwest of Blue Lakes-Pole Line Road intersection.

Woodbury disputed Paine's claim that Price was ahead of the other companies. He said he doubted that Price had reached any firm commitments from any major retailers.

"I really question whether anyone has anyone signed. To my knowledge, no one does," he said.

A key to a mall's financial success is obtaining commitments from major retailers who serve to "anchor" a mall's business appeal.

Woodbury said the Supreme Court's decision will have no bearing on his company's plan. He could not say, however, when Woodbury would approach Twin Falls City Council with a specific site plan, but he did say it will be "within the next year."

"We think we have the best site, the most developable site," he said.

Pamela Smith wins selection to commission

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

JEROME — Pamela J. Smith, a Jerome schoolteacher, has been named to fill the vacancy on the Jerome County commission.

Smith was appointed Friday by Gov. John V. Evans, from among three nominees selected recently by the Jerome Republican Central Committee and submitted to the governor for his choice in making the appointment.

Dannis Adamson, the GOP central committee chairman, said Friday night that he couldn't be more pleased with the governor's choice.

"She is a terrific person, hard-working and intelligent, and could just possibly be one of the outstanding Jerome County commissioners we have ever had," he said.

Smith, 35, will succeed Russell Howell Jr., who resigned two weeks ago because of health reasons.

Evans said the appointment is effective immediately and will continue until Jan. 7, 1983.

"I am excited about it and humbled," Smith said Friday night.

"I'm also a little apprehensive, but ready to give it a try."

Smith has the support of her principal, and she has prepared her students for some sacrifices by them, as well as herself.

"My biggest challenge right now will be orientating myself to the new responsibility," she said.

Smith also serves as the state Republican committeewoman from Jerome County, and is a former GOP central committee chairman.

She teaches English and journalism on a part-time basis at the junior-high school.

Smith told the committee last week that if selected, she would resign her teaching position at the end of the current school year.

Smith will serve with two other Republican commissioners, both newly elected, Carl Butler, a Jerome real-estate agent, and Karl Moser, an Eden farmer, both will begin their terms on Jan. 7.

Smith, a resident of Jerome for the past eight years, is a graduate of Boise State University.

The other nominees sent to the governor were Michael Dahmer and LaVog Morley.

Firewood-cutting fee will increase to $10

By The Times-News and United Press International

TWIN FALLS — The announcement Friday that a minimum fee of $10 will be set for firewood-cutting probably will not mean a major increase for most persons who cut their own wood in the Sawtooth National Forest.

Ed Waldapfel, the public information officer for the Sawtooth National Forest, said that for the past two years, there has been a minimum charge of $5 for cutting up to two cords of firewood, with each additional cord costing $2.50.

There has been a maximum of 25 cords of wood allowed per family. Waldapfel said, but statistics show most woodcutters in the Sawtooth forest average 3.5 cords a season.

"As I understand it, the $10 fee will allow up to four cords. Most of our wood-cutters take about 3.5 cords or more, so they have already been paying $7.50 to $10, and will not be bothered by the minimum $10 permit," he said.

"This will also make us consistent with the Bureau of Land Management fees," Waldapfel said.

Max Peterson, the head of the Forest Service, announced Friday in Washington, D.C., that the amount of wood allowed for each permit will be determined by the individual forests and will be in relation to supply.

Peterson said the minimum $10 fee, which becomes effective next summer, is being adopted to bring a more consistent policy to all forests. At present, such fees vary from $5 to $10,000, as well as the amount of wood allowed.

Currently, Waldapfel said, only fallen or dead timber is permitted to be cut for personal use in the Sawtooth forest, although the time may come when certain areas will be designated for green-tree cutting in order to thin out heavy growth areas.

Peterson said firewood demand from national forests has increased 1,000 percent since 1973. Last year, the national forests issued 900,000 permits, and cutters took 4.2 million board-feet of wood. As a result, demand is exceeding supply in some forests.

"There also has been a tremendous increase in our area," Waldapfel said Friday. "This year, there were 6,617 permits issued on the Sawtooth Forest, resulting in the harvest of 21,773 cords of wood. In the South Hills area, there were 2,587 permits and 8,905 cords of wood taken out."

County has contingency plans to deal with chemical spills

By MARTY TRILLHAASE
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls may face less of a threat but it is not immune to the possibility of chemical spills.

In fact, such a spill — involving a truck that was hauling fertilizer — required a temporary evacuation of a warehouse area last month.

Such situations are rare, but Cloyce Edwards, the civil-defense director for the county, says the possibility of a chemical spill is always present.

"I think there's always a threat to a certain extent," Edwards says. "I think people should be aware that there is a potential hazard in Twin Falls."

Edwards says such chemicals as pesticides, herbicides and fertilizers are brought into the area. Likewise, some radioactive materials, used for medical purposes, pass into Twin Falls, he says.

But for the most part, such materials are brought into the area for local use. The city is not directly connected to a main railroad line or the interstate highway, Edwards says.

As a result, the chances for a spill are lessened considerably, Edwards says. Nevertheless, the community's emergency plan must deal with the possibility.

"We've gone years at a time and never had a leak or a spill. We've just been lucky," Edwards says. "Some areas have lots of it."

Under the civil-defense contingency plans, a spill would be followed immediately by a call to the state Emergency Medical Services Bureau in Boise, which in turn would notify the communications center at St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise.

From there, either the manufacturer of the chemical or experts with radioactive materials would be notified.

Then, the company would send word back immediately as to the danger involved, what to clean it up with, how large an area to evacuate, Edwards says. "And this takes just a matter of a few minutes."

Procedures for dealing with spills depend on the material.

"If it's something that can be handled locally, then the local fire department has people who are trained to come in and take care of it," he says.

Meanwhile, sheriff's deputies and civil-defense officials would be authorized to decide what evacuation steps, if any, to take. School buildings and the National Guard armory would be used as temporary shelters in such events, Edwards says.

Civil-defense programs train firefighters, police officers and ambulance personnel to deal with such situations. Training exercises are held several times a year, Edwards says.

Cutting your own tree? Then better act quickly

TWIN FALLS — This will be the last weekend for cutting Christmas trees in either the Twin Falls or Blaine districts of the Sawtooth National Forest.

Trees will be available both today and Sunday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the two districts.

Forest officials said Friday that personnel will be at the cutting sites to issue permits and show persons where to cut the trees.

Those cutting in the South Hills will need to have snowmobiles, since cutting areas are about seven miles from the ends of the roads that are cleared of snow.

In the South Hills, persons should drive up Rock Creek Canyon Road to the Diamondfield.

Jack snowmobile parking lot, and then follow the marked snowmobile trail seven miles to the Yellow Jacket Springs area.

Permit fees are $1, and only one permit will be issued per family.

Tree cutting will continue on a daily basis in the Ketchum Ranger District and in Sawtooth National Recreation Area.

Beatles' magic will come alive on Monday

TWIN FALLS — A bit of Beatle magic will be playing Monday night in the gymnasium of Twin Falls High School.

Penny Lane, a four-man band, will conjure up shades of John, Paul, George and Ringo, with renditions of Beatles tunes — much as the Fab Four would have done.

Composed of four lads from Reno, Penny Lane is on a tour of Idaho and will perform one night in Twin Falls in a concert sponsored by the Twin Falls Associated Student Body.

Tickets are $5, and they will be on sale all day Monday at the high school. The concert starts at 7 p.m. "Three brothers" — Dave, Jim and Vic Campanaro — and Todd Sprague make up Penny Lane. The Campanaro brothers are long-time Beatles' fans, and they attempt to imitate the Liverpool musicians in hairstyles, costumes, gestures, accents and musical arrangements.

They have performed at the MGM Grand in Reno and at entertainment spots in Lake Tahoe.

The brothers' father acts as the group's manager, and he contacted the high school about including Twin Falls on an Idaho tour.

School officials, who reviewed a tape of the band, describe the show as "high-class entertainment."

Jerome dog pound receives gift from 'M-A-S-H' star

JEROME — Gladys Rascoe, who heads the Animal Protection Agency of Jerome, said Friday that the animal population of Jerome has received an early Christmas gift.

Loretta Swift, who plays the nurse on the television show "M-A-S-H," has sent a $100 check to help with efforts to improve the Jerome dog pound.

During a recent auction to raise money for the new pound, Rascoe contacted Actors and Others for Assistance, asking for promotional assistance.

Swift taped a number of radio spots and sent them to local stations to help inform the public of the auction.

"I thought that was very nice of her to volunteer her assistance and take the time to make our announcements," Rascoe says. "I certainly didn't expect her to make a financial contribution, too."

Rascoe says the money will come in handy in furnishing supplies for the pound, which now is under construction by the city. Among other things, the Animal Protection Agency is attempting to purchase water dishes and bowls for each of the cages in the new pound.

Fair manager gets national post

TWIN FALLS — While the state's rodeo queen did not win national honors in Oklahoma City last week, the fair manager for Twin Falls County came home with a national president's title.

Tom Shouse, secretary-manager of the Twin Falls County Fair, was elected president of International Rodeo Management Inc.

The organization is responsible for putting on the annual Miss Rodeo American Queen Pageant, which ran Nov. 30 through Sunday.

"It's going to be fun for me. I've got a lot of good people to work with," Shouse says. "We're feeling real good about it. The pageant is doing really well."

Each year, the Twin Falls County Fair serves as the site for the Miss Rodeo Idaho contest. The winner of that affair, Vicki Rutledge of Nampa, accompanied Shouse to Oklahoma City, where she competed against 40 contestants.

Brenda Lee Bonogofsky of Carson, N.D., was picked as the new queen.

Stuffed full

Each homecoming in the school collected both new and used toys, food and candy, and then stuffed them into large homemade stockings. The stocking distribution will be coordinated by the Community Action Agency.

Buhl development plan receives favorable vote after three-year delay

By MARTY TRILLHAASE
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls County commission will have the final say on a plan to rezone 180 acres of agricultural land near Buhl for residential and commercial development.

The Twin Falls County Planning and Zoning Commission on Thursday, on a split vote, recommended approval of the plan.

Zoning board members had tabled a request from Cecil Lyons of Buhl for the rezoning in 1979, waiting for more information. Contrary to an earlier account, the zoning board did not require a public hearing on the proposal Thursday, because a hearing was held in 1979.

Lyons' proposal deals with an area located on both sides of U.S. 30, one mile west of Buhl. He wants to rezone as commercial land that is located 660 feet back from the south side of the highway and 400 feet back from the north side of the highway. The rest of the area would be developed as residential land, with a minimum lot size of 2.5 acres.

If the zoning change is approved, Lyons would have to submit a development plan to the zoning board before he could proceed.

The initial vote was split evenly between zoning board members who said the proposal was consistent with other development and zoning in the area, and board members who expressed concern with the size and the scope of the proposed commercial area.

Chairman C.M. Lanting of Castleford east of the town, voted in favor of the plan. He said he wanted to get the issue before the county commissioners after the three-year delay.

The commissioners will hold their own public hearing before making a final decision.

In other matters Thursday, the zoning board approved:

- A request by Robert Ripa and Linda Christiansen to divide 2.5 acres from their 40-acre parcel, four miles south and three miles west of Buhl. They plan to sell the smaller parcel, which includes a home site, while maintaining the remainder of the land.

- A request by LeGrande Nelson for division of two lots in the Salmon River Ranches development, nine miles southwest of Buhl. Cliff Jensen of Hagerman said the split of a 6.8-acre and a 5.1-acre lot is designed to aid selling the property for residential development.

Wendell council learns ambulance firm needs help

By TERRELL WILLIAMS
Times-News correspondent

WENDELL — Ambulance service to Wendell and Hagerman is in need of more drivers and attendants.

Gilbert Schmidt, the owner of the service that serves Gooding County by contract, told Wendell City Council on Thursday that personnel shortages will be a problem arising in the near future.

"We're going to run into trouble soon," Schmidt warned, explaining that part-time attendants Bud Barkley and Melvin Jones have said they are hoping to retire soon, partly due to health reasons.

"I'm here to tell you I haven't had anybody beating down my door to take over for them. We're going to have to make some changes to replace these people."

Schmidt said volunteers are needed to take the medical training required and provided by the state, and at least one full-time person probably will be hired.

As for a full-time attendant, Schmidt said, it's $200 per month to take the responsibility of being on call. Volunteers on stand-by do not get paid unless they are called.

The ambulance service pays attendants and volunteers $10 per call and 25 cents per mile. There are an average of 12 to 15 calls per month, he said.

If more volunteers, attendants and drivers are not found, Schmidt said, the ambulance service may be provided from Gooding.

"But that's not necessarily acceptable," he added. "The public expects service from Wendell."

Those who decide to join the ambulance service take on a "big responsibility, morally and legally," in a lot of respect," Schmidt said.

There also is a commitment in time and training, as well as retraining.

He asked council to consider giving financial aid to the program. Council took no action.

In other business at the meeting:

- Council granted a variance to Ben Morgan to build a fourplex passive solar apartment building 10 feet, rather than the required 20 feet, from an alley.

- Robert Kester, the elementary school principal, asked council about a new garbage-collection fee that is being charged by the school.

According to Mayor Otto Lemke, a recent call from the school to have garbage collection increased to $100 a week, made the city aware that the school was not being charged.

"Why we didn't charge you, we'll never know," Lemke said.

Kester also discussed a sidewalk that the city proposes to install on the west side of the elementary school and playground.

Council President Bob Thackeray said the city has a $100 donation for the new sidewalk from the grandstand.

Wendell. He asked Kester to find out if high-school vo-ag students could move the fence to make room for the sidewalk.

Thackeray also suggested the school could help with the cost of the concrete.

Kester said he would find out and report back.

Scott Bybee, a Twin Falls engineer, resolved authorization from council to do the engineering on about eight blocks of water main lines.

According to city Clerk June Holm, the improved water lines will be installed in several sections of town as part of an overall improvement project.

Truck accident lands one man in the hospital

GOODING — A former Gooding resident, Julian Legaretti, 40, of Salt Lake City, was in serious condition Friday at Magic Valley Regional Medical Center, after his semi-truck collided with another truck near Bliss.

According to the Gooding County sheriff's office, Legaretti's truck was involved in an accident with another semi about 7 a.m. Thursday on I-84, just west of Bliss.

Officers and clean-up crews were at the scene for 12 hours Thursday, while wreckage was cleared away and produce from the two trucks removed from the highway and reloaded. One truck reportedly was carrying frozen potato products.

No information on the accident was available Thursday night from the Gooding sheriff's office. On Friday, the sheriff was continuing his investigation of the accident. He declined to say how it occurred, or if the vehicles' overturned, pending completion of that investigation.

"The other driver, Nathaniel Willis, 33, of Idaho City, was treated at Gooding Memorial Hospital and released."

Appointments

way, and I never questioned it. That person (Leonard) is still in office until the second Monday in January."

Former county Commissioner Bill Chancey of Twin Falls and outgoing Jerome County Commissioner Mel Grindstaff say they operated under the same procedures.

Besides the timing of the appointments, some zoning board members are less than pleased with the way they were informed of the upcoming decision, which they say resembled a firing, more than a farewell.

Although she planned to step down anyway, Butler says, "It would have been nice to have that option, to make that decision."

Jenkins produced her letter from the commissioners, which referred to the commissioners' "somewhat unpleasant responsibility" in making "personnel changes" on the county boards.

"They had a perfect fit by saying our records show you did not wish to be reappointed. We thank you for your service," Jenkins says. "Instead, it appears they decided to terminate that service one month earlier."

Cover says the decision to select new appointees stems from a new policy to limit terms on county boards.

"We more or less a year or so ago decided that six years was the length of stay for a board member," Cover says.

Jenkins' tenure on the board was a little more than three years.

One question unanswered at this point is whether the commissioners will attempt to change the philosophical composition of the zoning board with which it has had some disputes in the past.

Financier Belzberg released by police

By LAURIE WATSON
United Press International

CALGARY, Alberta
Multimillionaire Hyman Belzberg, one of Canada's wealthiest men, was freed unharmed Friday and his three kidnappers gave themselves up less than 24 hours after abducting him at gunpoint on a downtown street.

"It's over. It's over," he successfully concluded, Hyman Belzberg is with his family," said police Supt. Phillip Crosby-Jones. "He is well and there are three persons in custody."

Crosby-Jones said a telephone trace led police to a private home in a rundown section of Calgary where the kidnappers were holding Belzberg, 58, whose family's corporate interests are valued in the billions.

Through negotiations, Crosby-Jones said, the three kidnappers agreed first to release Belzberg unharmed and, after more bargaining, "they came out."

Crosby-Jones would not disclose how much ransom was demanded, but said "no money changed hands."

After his release, Belzberg called his furniture store from his post 42-acre estate to say he wouldn't be putting in his usual 12-hour workday.

"He said he thought he might take the day off. I told him I hoped he'd take a few days," said Dave Ritchie, manager of Crosby's Arcade Furniture Ltd. "He sounded very tired, but said he was very happy to be back with his family."

Ritchie said he didn't question his boss about the abduction but "we're all ecstatic in the shop. To know him is to love him. He's the perfect gentleman."

He described Belzberg as "very cool, very capable of taking care of himself. I think he would have functioned very well under the circumstances."

was seized by three masked men on the street in front of his furniture store Thursday and forced at gunpoint into a rainbow-striped van. The van, which had been stolen, was found four hours later three blocks away.

Furniture store driver Woody Woodcock witnessed the abduction but said he was threatened when he tried to help his boss.

"He hollered to me, 'Help me, Woody, help me,'" Woodcock said. "So I walk up to the van and I was two or three feet away from one guy and he pointed a gun at me and said, 'Back off, boy.'"

"I backed off — there was nothing I could do. I tried following them in the van but I lost them in traffic."

Hyman Belzberg and his brothers, Samuel and William, control First City Financial Corp. Ltd. with assets of $2.2 billion — First City Trust Corp. and numerous real estate and development companies across Canada and the United States.

75 children die in Nicaraguan crash

By OSWALDO BONILLA
United Press International

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — Relief workers searched the wreckage of a military helicopter Friday to recover the charred bodies of 75 Indian children killed in the worst air crash in Nicaragua's history, officials said.

The official newspaper, Barricada, quoted Culture Minister Ernesto Cardenal as charging Honduran and U.S.-backed rightists were responsible for the crash Thursday. No details were included to substantiate the accusation.

"This is what the gringos do," Cardenal said, using a derogatory Spanish slang term to describe Americans.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Alan Romberg said, "That's absurd, the United States did not have a role in this, period."

A Defense Ministry communique said the helicopter crashed while evacuating Miskito Indian children from the border towns of San Andres de Bocay to Mata, Kalpanini and Walakistan, in the northeastern Jinotega province.

The helicopter exploded in a ball of fire when it crashed into a ravine near the town of Ayapala, about 100 miles northeast of Managua, killing 75 children and injuring seven other children and adults, the communique said.

The ministry gave no immediate explanation for the cause of the crash and the helicopter was described only as a "transport" craft. It was the worst air crash in Nicaragua's history.

The area near the crash has been the target of raids by rightist guerrillas hoping to oust Nicaragua's 3-year-old leftist Sandinista government. The border region was declared an "emergency military zone" in early November following U.S. news reports that the CIA was supporting the rightists.

Newsweek magazine has reported the CIA was conducting a $19 million plan approved by President Reagan that was channeling money to the rightists.

The Defense Ministry communique said, civil defense rescue workers were mobilized in nearby towns of Kalpanini to recover the crash victims.

The Sandinista Popular Army through the various forces will continue the labor of evacuating the civilian population from the border towns that have been affected by the Somocista bands (supporters of late Nicaraguan dictator Anastasio Somoza) in their cowardly and terror-istic activities from Honduras," the communique said.

Honduran Foreign Minister Edgardo Paz Barmica, meanwhile, charged Nicaraguan soldiers illegally crossed the border Wednesday near the Honduran town of Revolucionero, 60 miles southeast of Tegucigalpa.

He said the soldiers grabbed one man and dragged him into Nicaraguan territory, where they killed him. His body was left on the Nicaraguan side, but in clear view of his family members and other villagers.

Paz Barmica said three children were wounded Thursday near the village of El Coyol when Nicaraguan soldiers fired across the Guasale River at a group of women and children on the Honduran side of the river. He gave no motive for the attack.

Mexico will eliminate controls on currency

MEXICO CITY (UPI) — Mexico said Friday it will eliminate its stringent currency controls in 10 days on nearly all transactions except for vital imports and exports.

Bank of Mexico President Miguel Mancera, an outspoken critic of the controls, said exchange controls had cost the country $1.4 billion since they were imposed Sept. 1.

Mancera said Mexico will establish two exchange rates, "one subject to control and the other completely free" on Dec. 20.

The preferred rate for vital imports, exports, debt financing and diplomats' salaries will go from 50 to 70 pesos to $1 for one week starting Monday, Mancera said.

"The free market will comprise of all the transactions with currency not subject to the controlled market. The free market will be totally free," Mancera said.

However, he said free-market transactions will be limited "in the sense of selling foreign currency. In bills only in the border areas and in the exchange modules located inside the international airports."

Travelers can purchase money orders and traveler's checks in any banks at the rate established by supply and demand, he said.

The restrictions should not be interpreted as a control but only to save the country the cost of keeping foreign currency in many banking offices, he said.

The Mexican peso has been controlled by the government since Sept. 1 at a fixed rate of 70 to $1 although it has traded on the black market in Mexico and in the United States for about 120 to $1.

A preferential rate of 50 to $1 was formerly given to vital imports and debt payments.

Mancera, who said the new system of exchange controls would be published in Mexico's Federal Register on Monday, added Mexican President Miguel de la Madrid had already called for a "realistic and functional" exchange system during his Dec. 1 inaugural address.

Through the regulations, Mexican officials hope to attract more tourists to Mexico, he said, adding the previous situation had created "the fear of being bothered when passing customs."

Earlier in the day, Mexican investors flocked to stockbrokers to buy special bonds they hoped would protect their money from an expected devaluation of the peso, brokerage houses reported.

A top Western banking source said the new rates would be "closer to Laredo," referring to peso rates between 120 and 135 to the dollar being offered in banks in Laredo, Texas, and exchange houses along the U.S. side of the 1,900-mile border with Mexico.

Chinese limit family size

PEKING (UPI) — China, whose billion people make up a quarter of the world's population, decreed Friday that couples can have no more than two children in the future.

"The policy of one couple one child must be strictly enforced, the birth of second children actively controlled and more than two prohibited," said a circular issued by the central government, the armed forces and the Chinese Communist Party.

The circular did not say how authorities would penalize couples violating the ban on having more than two children in the world's most populous country.

The ban was expected to go into effect almost immediately. A nationwide propaganda drive on family planning will be launched Jan. 1, the China Daily newspaper said.

The ban's announcement coincided with the end of a 15-day session of the National People's Congress, China's parliament.

The congress formally approved a 1980-85 economic plan calling for a healthy 4 percent annual growth rate with a 1983 budget envisaging a deficit of $1.5 billion and a 1983 budget projecting a $3 billion deficit.

Premier Zhao Ziyang said last week the success of the economic plan and budgets hinges on controlling China's burgeoning population, already more than 1 billion.

Population pressures already are straining housing, schools and food supplies and draining government subsidies for social services.

Gabriel Garcia Marquez with his award

Nobel prize winners honored at ceremony

OSLO, Norway (UPI) — The Nobel Peace Prize should be awarded solely for work in disarmament and a new award created for human rights, Mexican diplomat Garcia Robles said Friday in accepting the 1982 prize he shared with Swedish anti-nuclear campaigner Alva Myrdal.

Robles, regarded as the father of the treaty banning South American nuclear arms, made the surprise suggestion during his acceptance speech. He told the Norwegian Nobel Committee he had a "modest proposal."

"The Nobel Committee ... should award five prizes. The peace prize should go to disarmament," he said.

Committee Chairman Egil Arvik, in presenting the awards, paid tribute to the "patient, diplomatic work" of Robles and "the creating of public opinions" as exemplified by Mrs. Myrdal.

The two winners, former colleagues in U.N. disarmament sessions in Geneva, each received a gold medal and diploma, but share the $157,000 prize money.

Robles, who stressed he implied no criticism of previous Peace Prize winners, said that the new prize should be for work in the field of human rights.

A spokesman said later the committee would study the suggestion.

Mrs. Myrdal, a former ambassador to India, government minister, scientist and prime mover of the peace movement in northern Europe, said in acceptance that the false arguments against nuclear arms had been "exploded."

Both winners were given standing ovations.

Gabriel Garcia Marquez of Colombia won the literature prize, South African-born Aaron Klug won the prize for chemistry, Americans Kenneth G. Wilson won for physics, Britain's John Vane and Sweden's Sune K. Bergstrom, and Bengt-I. Samuelsson shared the medicine prize.

Bulgarians spy on Poles

ROME (UPI) — Italian authorities have widened the investigation of Bulgarian intelligence agents operating within Italy and are convinced they also spied on Poland's Solidarity trade union movement, it was reported Friday.

The allegations were the latest published by the respected newspaper La Stampa of Turin and Corriere della Sera of Milan. They followed by one day an announcement by Bulgarian authorities of the arrest of alleged Turkish arms merchant Bekir Celenik in connection with the shooting of the Pope John Paul II last year.

The newspapers reported Bulgarian agents have carried out extensive espionage operations in Italy and have been involved in arms and drug smuggling as well as the attempt to assassinate the pope.

Salvation Army's image has evolved, but its goal remains the same

By SANDY BATTIN
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

DULUTH, Minn. — Mostly we're aware of them during the holiday season, these gentle blue-uniformed soldiers with concertina, bell or maraca in hand, beside a contributions kettie.

People have a vague idea of what the Salvation Army does with the money: distributing food baskets to the poor and providing presents for children who otherwise wouldn't have much of a Christmas.

But in general, folks seem perplexed about the Army. It may be partly because of its image. The movies tend to portray Salvationists as trumpet-playing, drum-beating, stern-visaged men and women crying, "Repent!"

Maybe that image evolved out of the organization's almost theatrical history, starting in this country 103 years ago with a poster announcing the appearance of "Two Hallelujah Females," a mother and daughter who endured jibes and curses from crowds pouring out of saloons as they presented their message on a street corner.

The first official Salvation Army missionary party came to America a year later, holding an initial meeting in a vaudeville theater. The first soul they saved was a Bowery drunk, "Ashbarrel Jimmy," so named when he'd been discovered by a police officer with his hair frozen to the bottom of a trashcan and brought into police court that way. He'd been ordered by the judge to attend the service.

Then, there was convert Joe Turk, a West Coast shoemaker who soiled his customers' shoes with nail-spilling out "Jesus Saves," and played a cornet on street corners wearing a fez.

"Liquor interests and some established churches" fought the Army, a Salvationist pamphlet says. "Members were denied parade permits, then jailed for disturbing the peace."

During World War I, Salvationists were sent to the front lines, setting up canteens to comfort the soldiers. The Great Depression of the 1930s brought great demands for Army services: food, housing and jobs.

The Army has contributed to the American culture. Army youth programs taught Louis Armstrong and Harry James to play the trumpet and introduced the young Julius Erving to the basketball court.

The modern Salvation Army may not be as colorful as its ancestor, but some things remain much the same.

"The methods have changed," says Capt. H. Treeve Pasco, the pastor of the Army corps (church) in Duluth. "The message and purpose are the same. We run around in a horse and buggy."

First of all, the Salvation Army is a Protestant denomination with church services and regular members. The message is basic, fundamental Christianity: that the Bible was divinely inspired; that Christ's dying was an atonement for the world's sins; that grace comes through faith in Jesus. It does not include sacraments such as baptism or communion.

The Salvation Army believes that only through action can it reach people.

"It's a hands-on religion," Pasco says. "We try to meld together the social as well as spiritual needs of the people."

Yes, music is still important. "It's a force that unites everybody," the captain says.

The corps band plays at nursing homes, worship services and for some money-raising efforts.

A Salvation Army service is joyful, with music, hand-clapping, scripture reading and public testimony.

Although the local corps in Duluth does not sponsor a soup kitchen, it does have an emergency-assistance program and a thrift store to raise money and provide clothing and furniture at minimal prices.

It also offers a sort of referral service.

"By the time someone comes to the Salvation Army," Pasco says, "they're at the end of their rope. One of the things they don't need is to be shuffled around. We try to assess their needs and become their advocate."

But staff members don't spend most of their time handing out groceries.

"We talk with people about how they got into this situation so that two weeks from now, they won't be in the same predicament," Pasco says. "We can't afford to have regular customers."

Sometimes, it's more a matter of listening to a person, comforting him or her, rather than meeting physical needs.

"The old adage says, 'You've got two mouths and two ears, so listen twice as much as you talk.' We help people see that all is not lost. Gradually, we work with them in putting together material things," Pasco says.

But why does the Army feel a need to deal with people's physical needs?

"You can't talk to a hungry man about salvation," Pasco says. And that is the basic concept behind the Army.

Not a lot of those the Army helps join the corps.

"In quite a few cases, they will attend the church they attended before and that is just as important," Pasco says.

People in need needn't expect a lecture about religion when they turn to the Salvation Army for help.

"I am personally not a high-pitch salesman," he says. "It's more important how you act than what you say. If you can see the way I react and that I'm different, when the opportunity arises, you can say, 'I know you're different. Now what is it?'"

The Salvation Army most often locates itself in lower-income neighborhoods, Pasco says, because that's where the physical need is.

"There aren't very many going after those people sitting there on the fringes. I'm not condemning the churches, but it is easier for a person with a car to drive to church than it is for a person sitting in an apartment with the bare minimum. They're more concerned with what they're going to have for dinner than getting to church. When I'm hungry, that's the foremost thing on my mind."

"If you come up to a fellow who hasn't eaten for three days and you say, 'You're a sinner,' he'll say, 'You're crazy.'"

Emphasis in the Army is on the family. Wives hold rank equal to their husbands. Ministers are officers, and the members of the congregation are soldiers.

Everyone can — but isn't forced to — wear a uniform, but "because of the expense of the thing, it's not as popular today," Pasco says.

Although some news reports on the Army's recent 100th anniversary celebration predicted that the uniform was to be done away with, the Army has retained its most identifiable symbol.

With the uniform goes a lot of responsibility. "I get stopped on the street by people looking for help," Pasco says. "People stop and say they have a real need."

"It scares me at times because I feel people see me in uniform and they trust me. It behooves me to be careful of my reactions. Face it — we're human beings. I can be very tired. I might have put in 100 hours that week, but people don't know that."

Eagles' best tops Western

Kennedy paces CSI to 7th win

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — It had to be their best showing of the season Friday night when College of Southern Idaho's Golden Eagles downed 81-Nebraska Western 80-66 in the K and T Steel Tournament.

Gerald Kennedy, apparently getting back into shape after being slowed by a slow-recovering foot injury, flashed his swashbuckling defensive and rebounding form and Ron Beach and Phil Rohr recaptured the shooting eye that has been taking vacations parts of the season.

The result, coming after a good squabble, carries CSI against Casper, Wyo., at 9 p.m. today while Nebraska Western will play at 7 p.m. Both Idaho schools came through the first round with victories.

In the early going, Nebraska Western's guard duo of Barry Barlow and Sedric Toney looked strong enough to do the Eagles in. But Beach and Dewey Haley finally put a plug in the driving and dish-off offensive display of that duo and thereafter Nebraska Western relied on the steady play of sophomore Greg Dockery.

"Although CSI won it by 14 points, it didn't come that easily. CSI took the lead for keeps at 18-16 on a Chuck Glovick tipin. A fast start in the second half moved the Eagles into a 15-point lead. But Coach Dave Campbell's crew could never find the knockout punch as the visitors stayed generally 10 points behind.

"Toney, comparatively quiet in the middle minutes of the game, put on an offensive show at the end scoring eight of the last 10 Nebraska points. That plus a field goal by Darrell Daniels, brought Nebraska to within nine points—but in the final seconds Kennedy came up with four points off a pair of steals and his third steal led to a victory-capping slam dunk by John Irby just before the buzzer.

"This was our best game all-around," confirmed Campbell afterward, "I've felt that we've been playing a better floor game and rebounding better in the past few games, especially against Eastern Utah (Tuesday night). That's why we won tonight. We improved on the things that were killing us early in the year."

Ricks survives Casper bid—B3

"I felt that Ron and Phil didn't shoot very well in the first half but had good shooting second halves. Another key is that Gerald is getting well and when Gerald is working hard, we're a much better team," Campbell said.

CSI took the lead in a fast-action first eight minutes when both teams played man defense. After the Eagles zipped into an eight-point lead, Nebraska, after a timeout, went with the zone.

"That zone killed some of our movement. Our guys knew what to do but they didn't get into the rhythm of it. After a while they learned some patience and then when they wanted to one-three-one we started getting good shots for Ron and Phil off the baseline and they knocked them down."

Campbell said he doesn't expect things to get any easier against Casper tonight.

"Casper has some good quickness and they have two shooters they put a lot of confidence in. And that (Dave) Allen (Casper's 6-5 center) is a heckuva player. His strength and quickness inside will give us some problems," the coach said.

CSI had plenty of problems with Toney and Barlow in the early minutes Friday night. They drove the middle almost at will but Kennedy's six early points helped steady CSI and the teams saw-sawed through a couple of lead-changes and four ties.

CSI's Phil Rohr and Western's Greg Dockery blindly battle for a loose ball

Kennedy, Rohr and Haley quickly followed with field goals that opened the lead to eight points—Both teams continued to shoot well over the next five minutes as Nebraska Western climbed back to within four points. But two quick buckets by Haley suddenly broke the Eagles on top by 10 and they still had six to spare at Intermission.

Beach, Kennedy, Haley, Irby and Rohr collected field goals apiece to start the second half, sending CSI into its biggest lead at 47-32. But Barlow and Rick Smith got Nebraska Western going again.

"From that point on it boiled down to a matter of basket-matching although there was more drama in the action-packed game.

Wanman puts Kimberly past Devils for Holiday crown

By CHRIS HART
Times-News writer

MURTAUGH — The Murtaugh Red Devils almost succeeded in duplicating the feat they performed in their state championship football season: defeating A-3 rivals Valley and Kimberly in successive games.

But Kimberly's Eric Wanman spoiled Murtaugh's repeat bid.

Wanman sank a 12-foot jump shot with eight seconds left Friday night, breaking a 40-40 tie and lifting the Bulldogs to a 43-40 triumph over the Red Devils in the finals of the Murtaugh Holiday Basketball Tournament. The decision keeps the Bulldogs' record perfect at 4-0 and knocks Murtaugh, 4-1, from the undefeated ranks.

Prior to the Kimberly-Murtaugh duel, Valley captured the consolation title with a 64-41 victory over Hansen.

The Bulldogs, who frequently sear opponents with their blazing offensive pace, relied on defense to earn Friday night's triumph. Kimberly's tight man-to-man alignment limited Murtaugh to just to second-half points. "I told them at halftime the only thing that would keep us in it was defense, and that's what made the difference," Kimberly Coach Rich Thompson said.

Earl Molyneux and Tim Ferrell were particularly effective defenders, forcing Roy Nebeker, Murtaugh's leading scorer, to miss all but two of his 10 shots from the floor.

The Bulldogs were too overzealous in their tasks during the first half, falling into foul trouble early. "We weren't moving well defensively," Thompson explained. "You can't move like that and not expect to get fouled." Kimberly's hacking sustained Murtaugh, which sank 16 of 17 free throws in the first half and 20 of 25 overall.

Obviously, the Red Devils also defended remarkably well. Molyneux, who ravaged Hansen for 39 points Thursday night, managed just 10 against Murtaugh. After getting beat on the boards early, Murtaugh stiffened and kept the Bulldogs from utilizing the fast break, one of their favorite plays. The Red Devils also kept the Bulldogs from doing much of anything else.

"We wanted them (the Bulldogs) to make the shot from outside," Murtaugh Coach Jim Anderson said. "We tried to deny them anything inside, and we pretty much made it work."

Neither team played at its top strength. For Kimberly, the weight of excessive fouls put Molyneux and Kevin Holcomb on the bench for periods of time. Both ultimately fouled out. Meanwhile, Murtaugh lost starting guard Tim Gott for practically the entire second half to a sprained left ankle, which he suffered as the first half ended.

The contest's sheer competitiveness, though, remained unspelled. After the Bulldogs found on seven chances to tie the score, six times with the field and once on the line, they finally pulled even with 5:37 remaining, when Jeff Livingston, who made all six free throws he attempted, hit two from the line to forge a 34-34 tie.

The teams battled through two more ties as the end neared. With 1:24 Molyneux committed his fifth foul, sending James Matthews to the line for a one-and-one. Matthews missed. Kimberly rebounded, and with 1:07 left Wanman hit Holcomb with a well-timed, perfectly placed alley-oop pass for a basket and a 40-38 Bulldog lead.

But Holcomb fouled out with 40 seconds to go, bumping Matthews. This time the Red Devil senior hit both ends of the one-and-one, tying the score for the last time.

Kimberly called time out with 24 seconds left. During the break, Thompson instructed the Bulldogs to go into a spread-court alignment until five seconds remained. Then, he requested, the ball should be passed to a player cutting into the middle. Everybody else was to run "back door" for a pass, though the player with the ball should shoot if open. Thompson also gave the Bulldogs the option to shoot should they be overplayed.

Wanman took that option, dribbling to the right side of the key and firing his shot, which rattled in and out of the basket before finally dropping through.

Murtaugh called time out with five seconds left, but Matthews' long layup bounces past sailed beyond the baseline beneath Kimberly's basket. Wanman was fouled as time expired, sending him to the foul line, where he made one of two meaningless free throws.

Earlier, the Red Devils had built a commanding 28-19, second-quarter lead with streaks of 10-1 and 9-0. But the Bulldogs crept to within 30-25 by halftime, and continued to narrow the difference thereafter.

In the consolation game, the Vikings were down Hansen with their fast break, continually beating the Huskies downcourt.

"I wanted to get our kids pushing the ball up the floor better," Valley Coach Scott Tingey acknowledged. "With (Marlin) Mussmann, (Art) Harkey, (Gary) Taylor and (Dwight) Harkey, we've got great team speed and we have to emphasize that."

The Vikings were most emphatic toward the end of the first quarter and at the beginning of the second, taking a 33-20 lead by scoring 16 consecutive

Michael Dokes falls to the canvas after he was announced the WBA champion

Weaver falls in 63 seconds, but claims outcome fixed

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (UPI) — Mike Weaver, who became the second-highest rated welterweight in the history of heavyweight title fights Friday night, claimed his World Boxing Association championship bout against top-ranked challenger Michael Dokes was fixed.

The scheduled 15-round fight was stopped 63 seconds into the first round, when referee Joey Curtis jumped between the boxers and raised Dokes' hand, making him the new WBA heavyweight champion. Weaver, who had been knocked down earlier in the round but did not appear to be hurt when Curtis stopped the bout, reacted in disbelief.

A half-hour after the ring was cleared and a near-riot averted, Weaver and his manager-trainer, Don Manuel, had not changed their minds.

"I'm saying this was a setup, definitely a fixed fight," said a dejected Weaver. "Anyone who saw the fight and has any common sense knows the fix was on. That's why he was a 3-1 favorite all week — because people knew what was going on and (promoter) Don King was behind the whole thing."

"I wasn't hurt and I told him I wasn't hurt and I don't know why in the world he stopped it. It was just incredible."

Manuel filed a protest with the WBA immediately after the fight, requesting the fight be ruled "no contest" and that it be rescheduled 30 days from now.

The only heavyweight championship fight ever stopped sooner was in 1900 when Jim Jeffries stopped John Finnegan in Detroit.

Roy Tenslow, executive secretary of the Nevada State Athletic Commission, agreed with Weaver's camp that the fight was stopped too soon but said he didn't think there was any wrongdoing. Instead, he thought Curtis overreacted because of the death of a 65-year-old boxer who suffered a fatal brain hemorrhage after a title fight with WBA lightweight champion Ray Mancini last month.

He also said the NSAC will recommend a rematch.

The ring physician, Dr. Donald Romeo, agreed.

"They shouldn't have stopped it," Romeo said. "The referee was wrong. Weaver was fine. That's the way Weaver fights. He's a slow starter."

Dokes raced from his corner and pummeled Weaver from the opening bell, landing lefts and rights in the first 20 seconds of the fight and then putting Weaver to the canvas with a left hook to the jaw.

Weaver was up at the count of five and Dokes pressed the attack, planting the champion in his own corner, where he raked him with six overhand rights to the head. Weaver had his hands up and was defending himself and did not appear seriously hurt when Curtis stopped the bout with Weaver's back to the ropes near his own corner.

Federal judge's injunction says Raiders must return to Oakland for '83 season

OAKLAND, Calif. (UPI) — A judge Friday ordered the NFL's Raiders to return to Oakland from Los Angeles for the 1983 season.

Superior Court Judge Robert O'Farrell of Monterey County granted the city of Oakland a temporary injunction in its suit to confine the team and make it a city-owned enterprise under the principle of "eminent domain."

The ruling will undoubtedly be subjected to further litigation, but Oakland officials were delighted. "We feel like winners," said Richard Winnie, city attorney. "It is a simple eminent domain case and we are ready to have the team return in 1983."

The issue of the temporary injunction has already been argued through one round of court action up to the state Supreme Court, which decided last May that a such an order could be issued.

O'Farrell did not order an immediate return of the team to Oakland because he did not want to upset the current season. But he said the temporary order banning a permanent move to Los Angeles by the Raiders would be in effect until the issue of whether eminent domain applies to a football team is argued in court.

He said that issue could be decided before the start of the 1983 season, but if it is not, his injunction will take effect.

"I can see no reason why this case shouldn't be resolved prior to the 1983 season," he said, adding that a date for the city's eminent domain trial could be set next week.

O'Farrell said that a return during the 1982 season would significantly damage the Raiders. He said the team might receive a "cool" reception if ordered to return to the bay area immediately.

The case originated in 1980 when the city began proceedings to take over the team-through eminent-domain. The case was transferred to Monterey County where Oakland's initial attempt was rejected.

However, that ruling was overturned by the California Supreme Court which said Oakland possibly could exercise eminent domain — a ruling that property can be taken over by a city for the good of the community at a fair market price.

The case was returned to the Monterey County courtroom of Judge E.J. Leach, who turned down the initial Oakland request.

Leach was taken off the case after the city complained that he was biased and proceedings were turned over to O'Farrell.

In Los Angeles, a Raiders' spokesman said the team attorneys would review the matter.

"The judge has made his ruling and it's now in the hands of our attorneys," he said.

David Self, an Oakland city attorney, said he was "surprised" by the ruling.

"It's not everything we asked for but it showed careful attention to the concerns of Oakland," Self said, adding that he had hoped the judge would order the team back to Oakland for the remainder of the 1982 season.

The franchise had been located in Oakland since 1960 when it was a member of the fledgling American Football League.

But general manager Al Davis and the Raiders ownership were lured to the Los Angeles area by the lucrative cable television rights and a deal with the Los Angeles Coliseum for luxury private boxes.

The NFL originally tried to block the move but then lost an anti-trust decision last summer that freed the Raiders to move.

Hagerman nips Wendell in 2 OTs; Gooding beats stall

HAGERMAN — A clutch bucket by Hagerman's Brett Arriga sealed Wendell's fate as the Pirates won a double-overtime contest 61-60 Friday night.

Arriga earned 22 points in the tense non-conference victory, which saw both teams score five points in the first overtime after they tied it up 53-51 in regulation play. Wendell's Martin O'Connell countered with 21 points to lead in the losing effort.

According to Hagerman Coach Skip Pauls, his club had "a lot of chances" to put the game away earlier, particularly considering the fact Hagerman hit only 11 of 31 free throws.

"What do you say?" Pauls asked. "One night you hit 80 percent; the next night it's 33. It's the pressure; it's so early in the season that you make those kinds of mistakes."

Wendell's junior victory partially made up for the varsity loss with a 52-33 win over their Hagerman counterparts.

Raft River 39, Bliss 33

BLISS — A hot and cold shooting match saw Raft River beat Bliss 39-33 in boy's action Friday night.

Raft River recorded its first win of the season as the visitors went ahead 25-10 in the first half. However in the next half, Bliss roared back only to lose by six.

High for Raft River were Webster Three Legs, Wade Smith and Jex Houston, all of whom had ten points. Bliss' Randy Schroeder, a senior forward, was high in the losing side with 13.

"It was like getting two games for the price of one," said Bliss Coach Jerry Couch after the contest. "They burnt us on the press, which we used to be good at, but in the end they were overconfident going into the half."

Raft River, now 1-3, travels Monday to challenge Burley's Juniors. Bliss is 2-2 and has a road trip also, Tuesday at Castelford.

Glenns Ferry 47, Filer 36

GLENN'S FERRY — Sparked by three buckets late in the third period by Joe Rodriguez, the Glenns Ferry Pilots won their first Canyon Conference contest of the season, defeating the Filer Wildcats 47-36 Friday night.

Although the score was tied at the half, the Pilots outscored the Wildcats 25-14 in the final two periods.

Besides the 14 points by Rodriguez, David Johannek added an additional 12 for Glenns Ferry.

Glenns Ferry now 2-2 for the season, travels to Rimrock Saturday night while Filer, 1-2, will host Declo.

Glenns Ferry won the junior varsity contest 46-39.

Burley 61, Madison 56

BURLEY — Despite an awesome 31 points' from Madison's Danny Conroy, the Burley Bobcats were able to overcome the Bobcats 61-56 in SCIC play Friday night.

Fired up by Conroy, Madison jumped to a 10-4 lead early in the first quarter. A change in the Burley defense slowed the Madison scoring down and allowed Madison to take a 33-23 lead into the half.

Rich Ralphs added eight points in the third period to give the Bobcats the margin they needed to secure the victory.

Burley, 3-2 for the season, will travel to Twin Falls next Friday. Burley won the junior varsity contest 62-56.

OAKLEY — Kerry Morrison and Cory Woodhouse combined for 46 points to lead the Oakley Hornets to a wild 81-76 victory over the Carey Panthers Friday night.

Up by only one point in the first quarter, the Hornets rocketed in the second, outscoring the Panthers 24-10 to take a nine-point advantage at halftime.

Carey bounced back in the third, however, tying the game at 64 a piece, but a fourth-quarter surge lifted the Hornets to victory.

Oakley recorded its second victory of the season against two losses while Carey dropped to 0-2.

Oakley travels to Raft River next Friday while Carey visits Clark County Tuesday night.

Oakley also took the junior varsity matchup, defeating Carey 79-51.

CSI tops Ricks in OT to gain tourney finals

REXBURG — Jenise VanderVegh forced an overtime with a 15-foot jumper with three seconds left and then hit six points in the extra session to lift College of Southern Idaho's women past Ricks 69-55 Friday.

The victory put CSI into the Ricks Invitational championship game against Southern Utah at 8:30 p.m. today. Southern Utah earned the finals by nipping College of Eastern Utah 74-72 earlier Friday.

CSI had a series of heroes in college basketball's Golden Dome. Cass Herbst scored 21 points, hitting eight of 16 from the field and five in a row at the foul line. Michelle Hillsland, Mountain Home, ran in with 18 points, hitting on nine of 19 from the field and VanderVegh, playing her home college game, leaving Jerome High, ran in with 25 points — including the crucial ones.

The game was tied at halftime and see-sawed through the second half before VanderVegh hit the tying bucket. She quickly shoved CSI ahead 64-55 with a layup. Gen Fugert lead cresting at eight. Ricks got four back from the foul line but couldn't get closer than the final margin.

Raft River 51, Bliss 16

BLISS — Raft River's girls utilized height and experience to shut down the Bliss Bears 51-16 Friday night.

Raft River picked up its fourth consecutive victory while Bliss dropped its sixth consecutive loss.

Raft River started strong in the first quarter, outscoring the Bears 11-1 and managed to keep the momentum through the second to take a 26-8 lead at halftime.

Raft River buried the Bears in the second half, racking up 25 points while holding Bliss to eight.

Raft River, 5-3, travels to Oakley Tuesday while Bliss, 1-6, visits Castelford the same day.

Hagerman 25, Wendell 19

HAGERMAN — Stacey Pharis scored 12 points to lead Hagerman to a 25-19 win over Wendell High in a non-conference girls game Friday night.

Both teams had a cold night from the floor and the game was a rough-and-tumble physical contest.

"I don't have the exact percentages, but we couldn't have shot better than 20 percent," Hagerman Coach Clark Muscat said. "It was a pretty physical game."

Wendell was called for 20 fouls, allowing Hagerman to shoot 22 free throws.

Kristin McFadden scored nine points, including seven from the line, to help the Pirates raise their record to 5-3.

Wendell fell to 2-7.

Carey 44, Oakley 40

OAKLEY — Carey's Ann Reay and Joni Sparks each scored in overtime play as Carey defeated the Oakley girls 44-40 Friday night in non-conference play.

In a game marred with 55 fouls, Oakley took a commanding 25-14 lead at the half.

But a 17-point third period for Carey gave the Panthers a 34-31 edge to begin the fourth period.

With only four seconds left in regulation play Oakley's Mary Lynn Critchfield sank a five-footer that sent the game into overtime. Reay and Sparks quickly scored four points in the overtime for the eventual win.

Rick's Ken Cragun is pressured by Casper College's Kelly Davis

Ricks survives Casper's bid

TWIN FALLS — One of them had to leave his undefeated record on the court Friday night when Ricks College took on Casper, Wyo., in the opening round of the K and T Steel Basketball Tournament.

Ricks came out with its mark extended to 12-0 — but only after frittering away two big leads and just outlasting the B-Birds.

The victory came when Paul Gardner hit four of five free throws in the closing 16 seconds to stave off a closing rush by the T-Birds.

Ricks will take on Nebraska Western at 7 p.m. today in the concluding round of the meet, while Casper will go against host College of Southern Idaho in the 9 p.m. nightcap.

Twice Ricks threatened to blow the 8-0 T-Birds off the court, booming into a couple of 10-point leads in the first half with Casper rallying back — behind the inside play of Dave Allen — to take the lead at intermission.

In the second half, Brad Gardner and Jeff Anderson sparked another breakthrough that took the Vikings into a 55-40 lead with 15 minutes to play. But again Casper replied with some quickness and Ricks contributed some turn-overs to bring the game nearly back to even.

In the end, Ricks won it at the foul line with a hot-shoot 10-7 exhibition. But Casper had a horrible night at the line, hitting just six of 20 shots. Allen, a 70-percent free throw shooter for Coach Swede Erickson to this point in the season, hit just five of 12 but still wound up with game scoring honors at 27 points.

After that 55-40 lead — the last coming on a layup off a steal by Brad Gardner, Ricks turned the ball over twice and Allen came up with four points. Kelly Davis kept the rally alive with five points over the next couple of minutes but the Vikings still had 10 to spare at 70-50 with 4:27 to play.

Allen and Scott Sharp hit Casper points. After another Ricks turnover, Allen trimmed the deficit to four and Ron Strain cut it another two with a crisp off a steal.

At that point, Brad Gardner scored for Ricks but Davis offset it with a Casper howitzer. Ricks then missed a free throw but Ken Cragun rebounded the ball and that led to Paul Gardner's first two free throws with 16 seconds left. Allen got the points back at the

BYU falls to 0-5

PROVO, Utah (UPI) — Guard Joey Gardner scored 25 points and Long Beach State took advantage of Brigham Young's poor foul shooting to beat BYU 81-77 in overtime Friday night in the opening round of the ninth annual Cougar Classic.

Carlos Clark had a game-high 22 points in leading Mississippi to a 57-47 win over Concordia in the other first-round game, sending Ole Miss into Saturday night's championship final against the 49ers from California.

Long Beach State blew a 7-point lead at the end of regulation play, but the 49ers won the game in overtime when the host Cougars managed to hit only five of 12 foul shots during the extra period.

Reserve Nate Sims added 15 points for the 49ers, now 3-1, and Roy Mosby had 12. Ricky Smith gave Long Beach State the lead for good, 70-68, as he hit back-to-back baskets in the opening 90 seconds of the overtime.

BYU had taken a 34-21 lead late in the first quarter and was ahead 40-31 at halftime. But, Long Beach State dominated most of the second half and led 69-37 at 3:07 to go in regulation before hitting a dry spell.

But-BYU's Gary Furniss and Greg Kite then combined for seven consecutive points, tying the score at 66-61, and sending the game into overtime.

Devin Durrant led the Cougars with 19 points, while Kite had 18 and 14 rebounds, and Furniss added 13 points before fouling out at the end of regulation.

The loss was the fifth straight this season for winless BYU and ends the Cougars' string of four consecutive championships in their tournament.

Clark scored 13 of his points in the first half, giving Mississippi a 28-26 lead at the intermission. But Fordham tied the score at 30-30 early in the second half and remained in the contest until Ole Miss outscored the Rams 17-9 during the final 10 minutes.

Laird added 14 points for Mississippi, now 3-1, in the season. And Ole Miss won the game at the foul line, outscoring Fordham 25-9, Mississippi's 2-3 zone defense also forced Fordham into 15 turnovers and 39 percent shooting.

Forward Ed Bona led the Rams with 16 points, but he was the only "double" player in double figures. The Rams are now 2-3 on the season.

Moreno signs with Astros; Sundberg's pact blocks trade

HONOLULU (UPI) — Free agent outfielder Omar Moreno, one of baseball's leading base stealers, signed a five-year, $3.25 million contract with the Houston Astros Friday on the final day of the meetings.

Moreno, who hit .245 and stole 60 bases with the Pittsburgh Pirates last season, has stolen 50 or more bases six times in his seven years in the majors and is expected to provide the Astros with a much-needed leadoff hitter.

"Omar has outstanding speed and is a fine defensive player who will certainly enhance our team overall, both offensively and defensively," said Astros' President and General Manager Al Rosen. "In my mind, Omar is the epitome of the classic leadoff man and we look forward to him being the table setter for our offense."

Moreno's best season in the majors came in 1979, when he hit .282 and led the National League in stolen bases (77), at-bats (695) and putouts (490) in helping the Pirates to the world championship. The 29-year-old center fielder has a career total of 412 stolen bases and led the NL in that category in 1978 (.71) and 1979 (.77). His best figure, however, was 96 stolen bases during the 1980 season.

In another free agent signing, the Chicago Cubs reached an agreement in principle with outfielder Wayne Northen, 34, who recently had gone through the re-entry draft without being claimed. Last year, he spent most of the season with the Toronto Blue Jays, batting .270 with one home run and 20 RBI in 73 games. He was traded to Philadelphia and came to Pittsburgh June 15. He played in one game for the Pirates and went 2-for-4 with two RBI before being returned to Toronto on June 25.

Northen went on the disabled list on June 30 and was reinstated by the Blue Jays on Aug. 20.

Early in the day, a 5-player deal between the Los Angeles Dodgers and Texas Rangers, which was agreed upon by both sides Thursday night, was voided because of a clause in the contract of one of the principals in the trade, catcher Jim Sundberg.

In the trade, the Dodgers were to get Sundberg, a six-time Gold Glove catcher, from the Rangers for pitchers Bert Hooton, Dave Stewart, Orel Hershisler and outfielder Mark Bradley.

The stumbling block in the deal was a clause in Sundberg's contract, which he negotiated with former Texas owner Brad Corbett two years ago, that would enable him to be paid in full for four years after the 1988 season even if he did not play.

Under terms of his contract, Sundberg will receive $350,000 per year until 1986. At the end of that season, he does not have to play again and will still get paid $350,000 per year until 1990. If he does want to play, he has the option of renegotiating.

"The deal-breaker was Sundberg's contract," said Dodgers' Vice-President Al Campanis. "Our lawyers can't handle it and they can't accept somebody else's commitments."

Nevertheless, it is still possible that the two sides might iron out their problems by the time the next inter-league trading period begins next February.

Joe Klein, general manager of the Rangers, said any future discussions will depend on the Dodgers.

"You can't blame Sundberg," Klein said, "but I'm disappointed that we couldn't work it out. It ruined Sundberg's chance for national exposure, it ruined the young Dodger players from getting out from under a stacked deck and it ruined Hooton's chance to finish his career in the place where he lives and wants to settle for the rest of his life."

A minor hitch had also developed with regard to Hooton, a 19-and-5 man who had the right to veto the deal unless he was paid to give up that option. Klein said he did not anticipate any problem with that end of the deal, but because of the problems with Sundberg's contract the Hooton business was left untended.

Early in the day, it was learned that the New York Yankees had agreed to terms with free agent pitcher Bob Shirley.

Shirley, who was 8-13 with Cincinnati this year, probably will become an official member of the Yankees sometime next week, joining fellow free agents Steve Kemp and Don Baylor, who the Yankees signed within the past two weeks. Shirley's signing gives the Yankees their quota of free agent signings this year and puts them out of the race for free agent Steve Garvey.

Seaver will rejoin Mets to end career

TOM SEAVER
Medical OK a formality

HONOLULU (UPI) — Tom Seaver, once the kingpin of the New York Mets' pitching staff, will be rejoining his old team, probably by next week.

A trade was agreed to Friday between the Mets and Seaver's employer, the Cincinnati Reds, that will bring the 38-year-old right-hander back to finish his career in New York.

Holding up the completion of the deal is a medical analysis of Seaver's physical condition and the pitcher's reaching agreement with the Mets on a new contract. His current one expires at the end of the 1983 season.

To get Seaver, the Mets probably will part with two players, most likely one of their young pitchers and a minor leaguer.

"We have agreed with the prerequisite of compensation for Tom Seaver," said Mets general manager Frank Cashen. "Dick (Wagner, Reds president) and I are in general agreement on compensation."

"When we get home, we will decide when to petition the commissioner's office for a 72-hour period to negotiate a contract with Seaver, probably after the receipt of medical reports, which might not require Seaver's presence. It might be only (Mets) Dr. (James) Parkes conferring with the Reds' doctors."

Seaver, a three-time Cy Young Award winner, missed much of spring training with a viral infection and was not at full strength until late in the season.

A 14-game winner during the strike-torn 1981 campaign, Seaver slumped to 5-13 with a 5.50 ERA this past season. However, Wagner said the veteran right-hander pitched competently at the end of the campaign.

"I don't think he got over the effects of the flu he got in spring training until late in the year," Wagner said. "Near the end he threw very well."

Seaver, reached at his home in Greenwich, Conn., said he hoped the deal could be finalized quickly.

"I don't know if coming home is definite or not," Seaver said. "I expect to talk to Frank next week. Right now it's like I was pitching in the middle innings and you can't count your chickens until the game is over."

"Hopefully, this will be helpful for me and the club. I hope to reach an agreement and finish my career with the Mets. If I didn't feel I could pitch, I wouldn't be talking to you now."

Seaver began his career with the Mets, joining their organization in 1966. He reached the major leagues in 1967 and pitched 10 years with the Mets, during which time he posted four 20-victory seasons and won National League Cy Young Awards in 1969, 1973 and 1975.

After a contract hassle with the then-president of the club, M. Donald Grant, Seaver was traded to Cincinnati on June 15, 1977, in a controversial five-player swap that brought second baseman Doug Flynn, outfielders Steve Henderson and Dan Norman and pitcher Pat Zachry to the Mets. Of the players the Mets acquired in the deal, only Zachry is still with the team.

Seaver won 21 games in his first season with the Reds and has won in double figures each succeeding year. He has won 264 major-league games.

Mets catcher John Stearns said he was delighted to hear that Seaver would be returning to New York.

"I personally feel he can still pitch," said Stearns, reached at his home in Roslyn, N.Y. "I felt he got down and sick coming out of spring training, he was with a bad ballclub and it affected him. I look for him to be like he was in '81."

Coaches wondering about their benefits

EDEN PRAIRIE, Minn. (UPI) — Minnesota's Bud Grant said Thursday he and the other NFL coaches are anxious to see the new-players' contract will have any trickle down effect on them.

"It will be interesting to see what the coaches get," Grant said. "They want to see if they'll get a share of what's going to the players."

Grant, however, has resigned himself to expecting few benefits. "I don't know what the players' increases are as far as severance pay or pensions," he said. "But the coaches probably won't get any part of it."

Grant, whose protests have led to coaches getting the same pay as players-for-the-Hall-of-Fame Game and-the-Pro Bowl, said he has been approached about starting a coaches' union.

"There has been some talk about organizing," he said. "But they're scared to death they'll lose their jobs."

Grant said the average pay for an assistant coach in the NFL is $40,000 while the players averaged $100,000 before the new contract.

NFL weekend begins today

By United Press International

The New York Giants and Philadelphia Eagles could be called two teams in search of themselves.

The Giants stand 2-3 and are wondering whether they are good enough to make the playoffs in the NFL's abbreviated season. The Eagles are 1-4 and are wondering what happened to a team strong enough to make the Super Bowl two years ago.

Coaches Ray Perkins and Dick Vermell hope to find the answer when the Giants and Eagles renew a rivalry that dates back 50 years in one of today's two NFL games.

The San Diego Chargers (3-2) play the San Francisco 49ers (2-3) in the other contest.

"One of the things we've got to remind ourselves is that we didn't play a very good football team last week," says Perkins whose Giants rallied for a 17-14 victory over the Houston Oilers last Sunday. "Defensively, the Eagles haven't played as well as they're capable of playing, but you have to put yourself in their position; we beat them 20-13 last year and they're 1-4 now."

"But they were in the Super Bowl a couple of years ago and nobody gets to the Super Bowl without having a lot of pride."

"All we really need is a win," says Vermell, who has seen the Eagles lose nine of their last 11 games. "We've lost a total of four games by 14 points this year. We're not a good enough team to keep making the mistakes we've been making and still win."

The San Diego San Francisco game matches two of the league's most efficient passing teams.

Ewing-Sampson clash may reveal the future

By MICHAEL MADDEN
Boston Globe

WASHINGTON — Let's not be coy. This is The Duel in college basketball. The Duel of this decade. The Duel of all the duels since Elvin Hayes and Lew Alcindor filled the Houston Astrodome in 1968 when college basketball was younger and more innocent. But now we're wise enough to know this is a jewel of a duel.

And if the two giants grow into their roles, this could be perhaps The Duel of the future, 10 or 15 more years of jousts whose eventual winner could be set in stone and bronzed tonight.

Patrick Ewing of Georgetown and Ralph Sampson of Virginia will meet tonight (6:30 p.m., WTBS Channel 8) on a basketball court for the first time, and who wins likely will be winning years from now in the NBA. It's one of those rare moments, a game in which the future may be seen.

"We live in a show-business type of world," says Georgetown Coach John Thompson of college basketball's all-time, made-for-TV show-biz game. "The hype will always be more than the reality of the game."

But you see, the difference tonight at the Capital Centre is that the game means nothing. As pure drama, this game couldn't match Georgetown's one-point loss to North Carolina in the NCAA championship last spring in New Orleans, a classic to be framed and mounted on college basketball's mantelpiece. The potential is as sweet as when Indiana State's Larry Bird first met Michigan State's Bill Russell, but that, too, was for the national championship. How the teams played was more important than the magic matchups.

But in this picture, this game will mean nothing. Virginia, currently No. 1 and 50, will go on to play its Atlantic Coast Conference schedule. And Georgetown, No. 3 and 60, will go through the Big East, and maybe the twain shall meet again in Albuquerque. But Thompson and Georgetown want after this game for the matchup, the money (more than $500,000) and the mania; it is little more than an exhibition.

In the larger picture, though, the picture of 7-foot-4 Ralph Sampson in his bright Virginia jersey and 7-foot Patrick Ewing in his gray gym shirt, this game means everything. It is the meeting, the matchup, The Duel. It is a first.

But it won't be the last.

As usual with Thompson, there are no pat answers to the question of Patrick Ewing. Ask him if Ewing is another Bill Russell, and Thompson replies such comparisons are "odious." To Thompson, Ewing is good, but Russell was the best.

PATRICK EWING

Could win the battle

"Personally, the reality of it is that no human being has ever done on a basketball court what Bill Russell did," says Thompson. "To me, it's very odious to make a comparison between Russell and anybody until that anybody reaches a level of accomplishment that Russell did."

Intimidation, bluff, bluster, order, discipline and intelligence may all be part of Thompson's game plan, but dignity is on its cover. Thompson has a heightened sense of dignity, both his own and his players', even if he sometimes trods on the dignity of the media and others intruding on his team and his master plan for its development. The dignity of Patrick Ewing is important, but the dignity of Bill Russell's memory is just as important.

"Bill Russell didn't become Bill Russell because he looked like someone else called Bill Russell," explains Thompson. "It was because of his accomplishments. That holds true for Patrick or anybody compared to Russell; there isn't anybody to compare to Russell, because he was the best."

The comparison of Ewing-Sampson to the wondrous battles between Russell and Wilt Chamberlain in the NBA may be too pat, although Sampson does show a Wilt-like tendency to favor his jumper and drift away from the basket at crucial moments (indeed in Virginia's NCAA loss to Alabama-Birmingham last year, Sampson was often 15-20 feet from the basket in the final 10 minutes, the first 7-4 guard in basketball history).

RALPH SAMPSON

Virginia should win game

"What I remember about Russell and Chamberlain," recalled Thompson, who played two years with the Celtics, "was that the game was never pushed aside for individual matchups. That's extremely important here; the fans and the media will be excited about the matchups, but what I remember about Russell was that he was trying to win the game. He wasn't trying to win a statistical race."

Wilt's stat line usually had bigger numbers than Russell's, but the Celtics usually won. So this Ewing-Sampson comparison to Russell-Chamberlain may be more apt than Thompson will admit. Sampson has the shots and the tools, but Ewing has qualities. Especially the fire that burns inside him.

"There are a lot of players in basketball who can run but won't run, who can jump but won't jump," says Thompson. "Patrick is capable of running and will run, capable of jumping and will jump. I think the one ingredient he has that I haven't seen is his level of intensity. Patrick is willing to put forth the energy to do what he has to do; few athletes do."

Ralph Sampson is cool; Patrick Ewing burns.

One popular theory about Saturday's game is the Balance-Out Theory. It goes like this: Ewing and Sampson will neutralize each other and the game will be won by the other eight players on the court. Since Virginia is much more experienced than the freshmen-sophomore Hoyas, the Cavaliers will win. File that one with the Flat Earth Theory.

The Ewing-Sampson clash theory is also popular; this one goes that Sampson has spurned Red, the Celtics and the NBA for four years on The Lawn to win the national title, and this season he will do it. File that one, too.

The Terry Holland-Carl Coach Theory has more than a few believers. Its basic premise is that the Virginia coach has had Sampson for three years without yet figuring out how to play him. Thompson, meanwhile, immediately knew what he had in Ewing last season, forged a crunching defense around his freshman, and, except for a Freddie Brown pass to North Carolina's James Worthy in the final seconds, would have won the NCAA title. This one has some merit; Thompson is a better coach than Holland.

The Mike Jarvis Theory also deserves a close examination. Jarvis, Ewing's coach at Cambridge's Rindge & Latins School, says there is one undeniable attribute of Patrick Ewing — he always plays well in big games. "That has certainly been the history of Patrick," says Jarvis. "He always rises to the big one."

Yet, says Jarvis, "we always equated big games not in terms of personal confrontations, but in terms of the team. I'd be surprised if Patrick reacts differently in this game. He's always team first and Patrick second. Whatever is best for Georgetown, he'll do it."

Even more important, adds Jarvis, is that the game is being played in December and has no intrinsic importance. "If the game were for the NCAA title," says Jarvis, "I'd be just as confident that Patrick would play like he did against North Carolina last spring. Patrick's always played his best in championship games."

No NCAA championship here, not even an ACC or Big East title. But do not be misled; this game is for the championship ... the heavyweight championship. Ewing will play very, very well.

Russell and Chamberlain are only names to Ewing, and Chamberlain's is a vague one. "Mr. Thompson has talked to me about Bill Russell," says Ewing, "but I don't know much about Chamberlain."

Ewing ("I try to erase the mistakes we make on defense") is playing the same intimidating defense he's played last season for the Hoyas, but he is more of a player this season ... more in control, more of a leader, more of an offensive force, more mentally prepared.

"I'm not a freshman anymore," says the sophomore. "I'm one of the few players we have with experience, so I have to do these things I didn't have to do last year."

In time — perhaps this March — Thompson will have a better team than he had last season. In addition to Ewing and returnees Billy Martin, Anthony Smith, Freddie Brown and Eric Smith, Georgetown recruited two freshmen: David Wingate, a 6-5 shooting, ballhandling swingman, and guards Horace Broadnax (a good shooter) and Michael Jackson.

"Patrick's got to be one of our leaders because he's one of our senior citizens," says Thompson. "He's got to be in a leadership role for us, and he's doing it now."

Such as?

"When the other team shoots the ball, Patrick will call a three-one-four."

Which means?

"The three-man takes the ball out to the one-man, and the four-man goes deep," says the coach. "Patrick has to make that judgment instantaneously."

Ewing calls out many of the offensive and defensive signals, "and Mr. Thompson says at some point your physical abilities stop and then you have to learn the game as an art," says Ewing. "I'm trying to get a head start on learning the game mentally. Before every game, I think of how I'll play it."

Thompson feels that Ewing will become less riled than he did last season. "It depends on how he's hit and where he's hit," says the coach. "A lot of people will come in and try to grab him, poke him and give him a cheap shot to try to get him emotionally involved. Patrick is still a sophomore, and he's still going to get upset, but I think he realizes his role to this team."

Other changes, some subtle, some not. Georgetown is running as much as possible this season, and Ewing is getting his outlet pass to the wing quicker. He no longer dribbles after making a steal or blocked shot but quickly dishes the ball off to a guard. Most of all, the repertoire of offensive moves he showed in the NCAA title game against North Carolina now are common rather than unusual.

"Sometimes I went too fast and I was too blustery last year," said Ewing. "I'm concentrating on slowing myself down near the basket. I feel I've improved in that area; last year, I was going blind and just plowing in. Now, I'm able to wait and find an open spot and then use my quickness to go to the basket."

Do not be fooled by the platitudes, that this is just another game. This is December, the Cavaliers are a veteran team and Virginia should win its contest. But, in the real game, The Duel between Sampson and Ewing, just remember what season is upon us.

Yes, Virginia, there is a Patrick Ewing.

TAMARA MCKINNEY
Strong second run edges Erika Hess

McKinney wins first special slalom

LIMONS PIEMONTE, Italy (UPI) — American skier Tamara McKinney won her first-ever career world-cup women's special slalom race Friday, using a strong second run to edge champion Erika Hess of Switzerland.

The 20-year-old McKinney, who skis out of Squaw Valley, California, clocked an aggregate time of 1 minute, 36.61 seconds through the 55 gates of the Giorgio Armand course in this alpine resort. The course had a 170-meter drop in altitude.

McKinney, who finished second in Wednesday's giant slalom at Val d'Isere, France, turned in split times of 48.68 and 47.93 seconds.

Hess, 21, who holds three world cup crowns, clocked an aggregate 1:38.77 (48.17 and 48.60), while Hanni Wenzel of Liechtenstein was third with an aggregate 1:37.17 (48.70 and 48.47).

McKinney, also a successful equestrienne, earned her first career special slalom victory despite only a few days' training in pre-season practice for the event.

"I skied wild, I knocked a few gates with my arm on the way down, but at least I've got something to smile about."

—Tamara McKinney

"I skied just as straight and as fast as I could," McKinney said. "I skied wild, I knocked a few gates with my arm on the way down, but at least I've got something to smile about."

McKinney, also a successful equestrienne, earned her first career special slalom victory despite only a few days' training in pre-season practice for the event.

"The American woman's team trained only two days for the slalom," she said. "We mainly concentrated on the giant slalom."

The win puts McKinney into the season lead in the overall World Cup standings with 65 points. Hess trails with 60.

A bright sun softened up the snow for the second run of the day in the Colle di Tenda Alpine stretch which separates Italy from France.

"The snow was a little softer and a little more consistent all the way down," McKinney said. "On the first run it was hard for the first third of the course."

Hess had few regrets about her second place finish.

"I didn't do too badly, but I went too wide through the gates at the bottom of the course," the Swiss champion said. "Tamara is very strong and she will certainly have a good season, I think."

Wenzel, 26, a world cup winner in 1979 and 1980, said she felt her third place finish proved her form was getting better as the season progressed.

The women's next race in the downhill event will be at the Italian resort of San Siero on Dec. 15.

High winds postpone men's downhill race

VAL D'ISERE, France (UPI) — Faced with extreme weather conditions changing almost by the hour, World Ski Cup organizers again were forced to postpone the downhill competition Friday.

The downhill could not be held because of high winds and poor visibility at the top of the course. The skiers waited at the start while the race was first delayed for an hour and then called off for the day.

The downhill, the second of the season, was postponed until Saturday, with the first men's supergiant slalom, which counts for the world cup, put back until Sunday.

As the weather changed from wind to low cloud cover and from rain to heavy snow, the race jury decided to allow for further postponements. If the downhill cannot be held Saturday, it will be run Sunday and the supergiant slalom Monday.

The organizers said if no racing is possible Sunday, the downhill will take place Monday and the supergiant slalom will be cancelled. The program cannot be postponed any further because a men's slalom is scheduled for Tuesday at Courmayeur, Italy.

With the pre-holiday World Cup program — already — transformed because of lack of snow in the Italian Dolomites — the next stage of the circuit — the organizers want to hold the scheduled men's races.

Another factor was the financial backing by an Italian firm to sponsor the criterium of the first snow meeting at Val d'Isere. Having held the two-scheduled women's races here, the organizers are hesitant to cancel or transfer the two men's events.

Holding the downhill has priority, says Serge Lang, president of the World Cup committee, who said there were also problems with the next planned downhill at Val Gardena in Italy next week.

The Val d'Isere meeting, until this year the traditional opener to the World Cup season, has a history of weather problems.

U.S. Nordic members try to emulate Koch

Team building towards '84 Olympics

PARK CITY, Utah (UPI) — Bill Koch has been the heart and soul of the U.S. Ski Team's Nordic squad for the past eight years and the rest of his teammates are finally beginning to follow the Vermont'er's example.

Nordic team director Jim Page puts simply: "There's nobody in the world any better than Bill."

"He did a great thing last year," Page added, referring to Koch's six international victories and his men's title in the overall Nordic World Cup standings — a "first for an American cross country skier."

"We always had a feeling Bill could break through and win the World Cup. And now Bill and the rest of our skiers are going to try to build on last season for this year and the 1984 Winter Olympics."

It looked like another long year for the U.S. skiers at the start of the 1982 season as Koch placed 26th in his first international race. But Koch only had one more bad race all season. He won three 15-kilometer races and an equal number of 30-kilometer events, plus picking up the bronze medal in the men's 30-k at the FIS World Championships.

The team's best finish came three weeks after the World Championships when Koch and Dan Simoneau of Eugene, Ore., placed 1-2 in the men's World Cup 30-k at Falun, Sweden.

Koch's most dramatic win came in the final 1982 World Cup race, in the men's 15-k at Castelrotto, Italy. He won by 50 seconds, using a new cross country skiing style he has developed.

Page says Koch's new technique combines the traditional "diagonal" skating with a double-pole arm action that has come under attack from the other international teams.

"No one seems to know exactly why it's wrong. The bottom line seems to be that it just doesn't look right to the Europeans and the Scandinavians," Page said.

The 27-year-old Koch burst on the international scene with his silver medal in the men's 30-k at the 1976 Winter Olympic Games and he's been near the top in World Cup competition ever since.

In 1980, Simoneau had four top-10 finishes to rank seventh overall in the men's Nordic World Cup standings. Koch, Simoneau, Tim Caldwell of Putney, Vt., and Jim Galanes of Brattleboro, Vt., gave the U.S. team its first international relay victory.

"We've found we can be competitive but we have to be on the World Cup circuit for all 10 races," Page said. "We can't miss two or three events and expect to stay where we are."

"Our plan is to look at the next two years as a cycle leading into the Olympic Games and to continue the progress we've been making over the past several years. For 1983, that means full participation on the World Cup circuit."

Page says, however, his women's cross country team "doesn't have the strength" to produce a top-10 finisher this year.

Jeff Hastings of Norwich, Vt., was the top U.S. jumper last year, placing seventh in the second half of the 1982 World Cup season. But Page says newcomer Mike Holland, 20, of Norwich, "has been jumping out of the sky" in pre-season meets on plastic-surfaced hills in Europe "and he's had two top-15 placings among the international jumpers in those practice meets."

"Page says Norway should have the top spot in cross country in the Olympic teams this year, while the Russians, Swedes and Americans should be among the top four" in cross country.

He picks the Austrians, Finns and East Germans to challenge Norway in jumping, while "the Russians, East Germans and Czechs should dominate women's cross country."

Four-way tie develops in mixed team tourney

LARGO, FLA. (UPI) — Brad Bryant and Chris Johnson fired an 8-under-par 64 Friday to bolt into a four-way tie for the lead with 11-under-par 133 after the second round of play in the $500,000 Mixed Team Classic.

Also at 133 were Leonard Thompson and Carole Charbonnier, who had a second-round 68, Fred Couples and Jan Stephenson with 66, and Jay Haas and Hollis Stacy, who had a 67.

One shot behind the leaders were Jerry Pate and Jo Ann Washam, who had their second straight round of 67. Thompson and Charbonnier had shared the first-round lead with Chi Rodriguez and Lynn Adams, who were one-under-par 71 Friday for a 136, three shots out of the lead.

Alone at 135 was the team of John Mahaffey and JoAnne Carner, who had a second-round 67. Tied with Rodriguez and Adams at 136 were Doug Tewell and Barbara Moxness, who had a 65, Charles Coody and Sandra Haynie, with 66, and Scott Hoch and Terri Luckhurst, who also had an 8-under-par 64.

In his 12th season, Freddie Brown is key 6th man for Seattle

Exception

Downtown' Freddie Brown not customary NBA player

SEATTLE (UPI) — The Seattle SuperSonics looked terrible against the Los Angeles Lakers in the first meeting of the two clubs in the 1982-83 season.

To Seattle fans, it seemed the Lakers raced to a 30-16 lead in no time at all. While the Sonics' starting lineup was having trouble locating the basket.

The crowd of more than 26,230 fans booed, even though their team was 16-1 on the season and facing only their second loss.

By the second quarter, Seattle Coach Lenny Wilkens decided it was time to send in sharp-shooting guard Fred Brown, 34-year-old veteran of 12 seasons, to change the unfavorable flow and, perhaps, mount one of his patented scoring surges.

The Sonics were down 46-31 when "Downtown" Freddie Brown entered the game. He scored 10 points, eight in a row, to slice the Laker lead to three at the half, and once again prove himself as one of the finest pure shooters in the game.

The Lakers wound up trouncing Seattle, 111-98, proving that even a "sixth man" like Brown cannot rescue the club every time. But his reputation as the man who can rescue the flow of a game and pour in the points was untarnished.

How does he do it? The 6-foot-3 guard, who has an incredible assortment of shots, will tell you:

"There are basic things that have to be done, that you can bring into the game. You really have to be ready and willing to produce. The ability to take over a game is both mental and physical, with the mental operating the physical."

Brown exudes an aura of low-key confidence, but he doesn't play down his talents. "I can do it easily because I've been doing it for so many years. I've mastered it. Of course at times it works better than other times."

A major trick in Brown's magic bag is his perimeter shooting, which allows him to exploit the three-point basket.

In the first year of the three-point shot, 1979-80, Brown led the league in that category. Early in the 1982-83 season, he sank five of his first six efforts from three-point range.

Developing such a shot has taken time, patience and a whole lot of talent, Brown said.

"It's a great gift," he explained. "It takes time. Timing and preparation. But essentially it's a gift."

In a league where time is short and players are bumped from team to team in a matter of months, the University of Iowa graduate has become an exception.

Picked by the Sonics in the first round of the 1971 draft, he has been with Seattle ever since. During his 12-year stay, he has seen four coaches come and go while putting in his time as play-making guard, leading scorer and now, team catalyst.

Only one other active NBA player, Calvin Murphy of the Houston Rockets, has spent more years and played his entire pro career with one team.

Although his statistics would probably not earn him a spot on any all-NBA team, his longevity has helped him to eight all-time Sonic records.

Brown just recently surpassed the team's all-time assist record of 2,777 — set by Lenny Wilkens during his four-year playing career with Seattle.

In addition to the assist record, his team records include games played, minutes, played, field goals made, field goals attempted, scoring, steals and personal fouls.

Making the starting lineup is no longer a priority for the enthusiastic veteran. His role as back-up guard is so ingrained that even the Sonics' new 1-3-1 offense has not altered Brown's style of play.

"With me, it's a little different," he said. "I don't need the freedom of the new offense. I just basically keep things stabilized, distributing the ball to the proper people at the proper times."

As the Sonics' captain for six seasons, Brown has also become something of a floor commander and coach.

When asked if he feels like a coach, Brown sat back in his chair and laughed, looking for the right words to avoid stepping on Wilkens' toes.

"Well, I have to think any good player considers himself to be something of a coach on the floor," he said in a professional tone. "But there's nothing mystical about being a coach."

Brown's latest contract runs through the 1983-84 season, with the option of moving into a front office executive position if and when he decides to retire.

But this season, trading in his basketball for a briefcase is the last thing he has in mind.

"No, I never get tired of it," he said. "Maybe if we were losing, but we have a great group of guys playing together. That's a big plus. With the talent and attitude of this team, the possibilities become infinite."

Firemen battle the Friday blaze at Atlantic City's Steel Pier

Fire destroys Boardwalk amusement

By LOUIS TOSCANO
United Press International

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — A spectacular eight-hour fire, blamed on arsonists, Friday wrecked the famed Steel Pier, for decades the Boardwalk's main amusement attraction until its closing in 1979.

Among the structures destroyed on the pier, which extends into the Atlantic Ocean about one-half block from Resorts International Hotel-Casino, was the shuttered, 84-year-old, 3 1/2-story music hall.

Several firefighters received minor injuries in the blaze.

A damage estimate was not available, but fire officials said the figure could surpass $1 million.

Resorts, which purchased the 2,230-foot pier, jutting off the resort's Boardwalk, for $4.4 million in 1978 and closed it one year later, had planned to build a shopping mall on the site.

Arson investigators said they believed the fire was set deliberately by several people who were seen near the pier shortly before the flames were discovered at about 3:20 a.m. EST.

"There's no doubt in my mind that this was arson," said detective Clifford Sykes. "We have people seen in the area — more than one. We think they were involved and we think we know who they are."

Police took in custody a young man near the scene of an earlier fire in a rooming house about four blocks from the pier. About a dozen occupants of the rooming house escaped unharmed.

"He's being held on an unrelated theft of vehicle warrant, and we still plan to question him some more about the pier and the (house) fire," Sykes said, adding the man had been questioned previously by police about other resort fires.

The Steel Pier, the largest amusement pier in the United States, was once the resort's premier entertainment center, hosting top performers for more than 70 years.

Shortly after it opened in 1898, comedian W.C. Fields played the theater as a juggler, using the name "William C. Fields." In subsequent years, singer Frank Sinatra, the Jimmy Dorsey and Glenn Miller bands and the Beatles appeared at the pier, which also featured movies and an amusement arcade.

Some of the spectators watching the pier burn sadly recalled attending shows at the pier.

"When you see something going up that you remember, you feel sorry," said Ruth Derillo of Roselle Park, N.J.

Avoids death penalty Man guilty of mayor murder

By DENNIS O'SHEA
United Press International

PLYMOUTH, Ind. — Harold W. Lang pleaded guilty but mentally ill Friday in the revenge slaying of LaPorte Mayor A.J. Rumely and Rumely's wife, escaping a possible death sentence.

The unexpected plea agreement aborted a two-week long trial just as the defense was scheduled to begin presenting evidence.

"Guilty, but mentally ill is still guilty," said LaPorte County Prosecutor Walter Chapala. "That's where we believed the case was going and where we felt for the true administration of justice it should go."

Defense attorney Richard Schaumann said a psychiatric report finding Lang insane when he shot the Rumelys was received Thursday, creating a two-one split for insanity among the court-appointed doctors consulted in the case.

Chapala denied that the psychiatric reports prompted his decision to allow Lang to plead guilty but mentally ill in exchange for withdrawal of the prosecution's death penalty.

"They were part of the consideration, sure," Chapala said, "but taking into account the whole aspect of the case ... we felt proper justice demanded this result."

The Rumelys' seven children, speaking through their eldest brother, said Chapala had consulted them before making his offer to Lang and they had agreed.

"Basically, we're very glad it's over and we feel justice has been done," said Peter Rumely, 40.

Lang, 30, spoke calmly, quietly but clearly as he withdrew his earlier plea of innocent by reason of insanity to two counts of murder and one of burglary.

He was accused of attacking the Rumelys in their fashionable LaPorte home early Memorial Day. Frances Rumely, 68, died almost immediately, but the mayor, 71, lingered in critical condition until Thanksgiving. The case was moved from LaPorte on a change of venue.

Lang could still be sentenced to a maximum of 170 years in prison, but Schaumann is expected to argue for a shorter term.

Lang, who prosecutors charged was embittered by Rumely's refusal to help him return to his sewage treatment plant job, will under state law be sent to a mental institution.

If he ever is determined to be recovered, he would have to serve out his term in prison.

Bomb located in Florida supermarket

DEERFIELD BEACH, Fla. (UPI) — Police checking out a call from an extortionist that "bombs" had been planted in 30 Florida supermarkets found and defused one device Friday, but searches at other stores proved futile.

"It was an actual explosive device," said Sgt. Jim Walkup, supervisor of the bomb squad. "Had it detonated inside the store, it would have caused damage and great bodily harm."

Authorities said a call was received about 8:30 a.m. at the Publix Deerfield store saying bombs had been planted there and at 29 other Publix stores across the state.

The caller demanded money, but police would not say how much. Nor would authorities disclose whether store officials had tried to negotiate with the caller.

The Deerfield store had not opened for the day when the call was received, but all employees were ordered out and a search immediately launched.

Lawyer wants Williams free

CHICAGO (UPI) — A defense lawyer Friday pleaded for the freedom of Teamsters President Roy Williams, one of five men charged with conspiring to bribe Sen. Howard Cannon, by telling jurors Williams does not have long to live.

Thomas Wadden, one of four defense attorneys who completed closing arguments in the bribery conspiracy trial that opened two months ago, reminded the jury of his client's beginnings and the state of his health.

"He's one of 12 or 13 children. I forget," said Wadden. "He has fought and fought hard. He has fought for his country and his union. He does not have a lot of time left."

"He is 67. I think you have seen some of his health problems. I hope, ladies and gentlemen, you won't turn the lights out on Roy Williams. He has a few dreams left. I hope you will let him pass his twilight years with honor, the same honor with which he served his country."

Williams suffers from emphysema and frequently was wracked by coughing fits during the trial. An oxygen tank was kept nearby for his possible use. He also was hospitalized at one point during the proceedings, delaying the trial.

Disease hits children

ATLANTA (UPI) — An incurable and often fatal disease first discovered among homosexual men apparently has spread to children through blood transfusions, the national Centers for Disease Control reported Friday.

The disorder, called acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS), destroys the body's immune system, leaving patients unable to fight off usually harmless organisms.

A 20-month-old San Francisco child, who had several blood transfusions at birth, appears to have contracted the disease through one of those transfusions, the CDC said in its weekly Morbidity and Mortality Report.

In addition, two children with hemophilia, one from Los Angeles and one from Pennsylvania, were reported to have contracted the disease.

"These additional cases provide important perspectives on AIDS in U.S. hemophiliacs," the CDC said. "Two of the patients described here are 10 years of age or less, and children with hemophilia must now be considered at risk for the disease."

Video game tremors stall rally attempts

By FRANK W. SLOSSER
United Press International

NEW YORK — Stocks plunged for the third consecutive Friday, when a rally attempt fizzled under the weight of a selling blitz in once-glamorous video game makers.

Trading was moderately active.

Oil issues countered the overall down trend by posting significant gains as spot energy prices began to rise in international markets.

The Dow Jones Industrial average, up 7 points at the outset after plunging 19.13 points Thursday, shed another 9.20 points to 1,018.76. The closely watched average lost 38.18 points the past three sessions and 12.60 for the week overall.

The New York Stock Exchange index dropped 0.28 to 80.49 and the price of an average share decreased 11 cents. Standard & Poor's 500-stock index shed 0.43 to 139.57. Declines topped advances 975-608 among the 1,927 issues traded.

Big Board volume totaled 86,430,000 shares compared with 90,320,000 traded Thursday.

"The market is trying to get over the shock of the what's happened to the video game industry," said Newton Zinder, E.F. Hutton vice president.

Megabuck Institutions sold heavily in Warner Communications and Mattel. The companies tumbled Wall Street by forecasting disappointing earnings results because of lagging sales and stiff competition.

The gloomy predictions raised fears the economic recovery would be delayed even though the government reported November retail sales rose 2.3 percent for their biggest gain since May.

Analysts said the stock decline also was influenced by a drop in bond prices on investor concerns the Federal Reserve would not cut its discount rate anytime soon because of the recent growth in the nation's money supply.

Composite volume of NYSE issues listed on all U.S. exchanges and over the counter totaled 101,499,800 shares compared with 106,982,780 traded Thursday.

The American Stock Exchange index fell 1.73 to 334.37 and the price of a share shed seven cents. Declines topped advances 378-253 among the 842 issues traded. Composite volume totaled 9,222,805 shares compared with 10,334,300 traded Thursday.

The National Association of Securities Dealers NASDAQ index of OTC stocks lost 3.39 to 233.85.

On the trading floor, Warner Communications, which plunged 16 1/2 points Thursday, was the most active NYSE-listed issue, off 1 1/4 to 34 1/2. Warner said Wednesday its 1982 earnings would be less buoyant than expected.

Mattel, which did not trade Thursday, was second on the active list, off 7 1/4 to 16 1/4. The video-game and toy maker said it expected to report a fourth-quarter loss because of declining sales. Analysts earlier this week cut their Mattel estimates.

Exxon was third on the active list, up 1/4 to 29 1/4. Atlantic Richfield was fourth, up 1/4 to 43 as the oil group jumped on price increases.

Among the other oil issues, Superior Oil gained 1/2 to 28 1/4, Getty 1/4 to 32 1/4, Indiana Standard 2 to 43 1/4, Ohio Standard 1 to 38, Union Oil of California 1 1/4 to 30 1/4 and Texaco 1 to 31.

Stocks of high-technology and retail issues were mixed after being elaborated on the Warner Communications-Mattel forecasts.

Tandy Corp., which said its sales were good, gained 3/4 to 52 1/2 in active trading. The stock lost 6 1/4 points Thursday.

Coleco, which skidded 3 1/4 Thursday despite stating its earnings would be up sharply from a year ago, rebounded 1 1/4 to 35 1/4.

Toys R Us, which dropped 4 1/2 points Thursday, recovered 2 1/4 to 49 1/2. The company said its sales of home-video games was strong.

Southland Corp., whose Seven-Eleven stores have reaped large profits over the years from coin-operated video games, surrendered 1 1/4 to 39 in active trading.

Court rejects merger block

NEW YORK (UPI) — A federal appeals court Friday rejected the pleas of three competing railroads to block the acquisition of Missouri Pacific and Western Pacific by the Union Pacific Corp.

The Interstate Commerce Commission approved the proposed merger Oct. 20.

The appeal to stay the acquisition was filed by Southern Pacific, the Santa Fe and the Kansas City Southern railroads. In turning these lines down, the appellate court in Washington gave them 10 days in which to file an appeal to the Supreme Court.

Union Pacific Chairman James H. Evans said he was confident the Supreme Court would uphold the court of appeals, thus removing the last obstacle to the merger.

Venezuela maintains policy

CARACAS (UPI) — Venezuela's new finance minister Arturo Sosa said Friday the government's economic, monetary and financial policies will remain unchanged because it has produced "good results" thus far.

Sosa, 59, is an experienced economist and attorney who has been active in the private sector for approximately 20 years prior to his appointment replacing Luis Ugueto.

Sosa told reporters he saw no reasons to alter current government economic, monetary and financial policies because "good results" have been reaped such as the struggle to control inflation.

Tire contract vote Sunday

OPELIKA, Ala. (UPI) — Union members at a Uniroyal Tire Co. plant where nearly half the 1,400 workers have been laid off will take another vote Sunday on a proposed contract that would cut wages.

The Opelika plant laid off 620 workers in October after Uniroyal Rubber Workers Union members twice voted down a concessions package the company said it needed to keep the plant operating.

Union officers and the plant managers said Thursday they had reached agreement on a plan to save the factory, but union members must also endorse the package before it can go into effect.

Benzene leak shuts plant

NEWINGTON, Conn. (UPI) — A Newington office products manufacturer is to shut down equipment because of unsafe levels of the carcinogen benzene emanating from the plant planned to lay off 35 of 250 workers Friday.

Stanley Pac, commissioner of the Department of Environmental Protection, told Royle to shut down one of its two typewriter ribbon coating machines because high levels of benzene were being speeded from an incinerator stack.

A level of 10 parts per million is allowed by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration. Tests at Royle showed an average 11.6 parts per million of benzene with concentrations as high as 15.5 parts per million.

Caterpillar, union talking

MENTOR, Ohio (UPI) — The United Auto Workers union opened talks Friday with the Caterpillar Tractor Co. in an effort to save the jobs of hundreds of workers at the firm's lift-truck plant in Mentor.

UAW vice president Stephen P. Yokich and Region 2 director Bill Casseville asked for a meeting with officials of both Caterpillar and its Towmotor subsidiary to explore ways to save the jobs of UAW Local 790 members.

Caterpillar told the UAW Wednesday during national negotiations in St. Louis it had decided production at the plant operated by the Towmotor subsidiary "should be discontinued in the very near future."

Anderson names executives

OGDEN, Utah — Anderson Lumber Co. has appointed three new executives, James C. Beardsall, president, said.

David Chamberlain has been elected vice president of finance and administration, and will also serve as corporate treasurer; William G. Zickgraf has been chosen vice president of operations; and Robert E. McHale has been named vice president of merchandising.

The firm operates building materials outlets in Idaho, Wyoming and Utah with a store in Twin Falls.

Sales gain in '83 not likely

By MICHELINE MAYNARD
United Press International

DEARBORN, Mich. — Ford Motor Co. Chairman Philip Caldwell said Friday his firm is preparing for no improvement in industry sales in 1983, but hopes for a 10 percent to 15 percent increase.

Ford is no longer interested in purchasing Volkswagen of America's mothballed Sterling Heights, Mich., plant because there is no demand for the cars it would produce, Caldwell told UPI.

Sales of domestic and imported cars are expected to reach about 8 million units, the worst so far of an industry slump that began in 1979 following an all-time peak of 11 million auto sales.

Caldwell said Ford is budgeting on the assumption that 1983 sales will not improve from 1982 — but will not worsen, either.

"We've made our plans on the assumption that it won't get better than last year," said Caldwell.

"Hopefully, however, things will be 10 to 15 percent better."

Ford has cut $3 billion from its operations in the past three years, including $1 billion in the past year. Much of that money was saved by concessions granted by United Auto Workers members.

Caldwell said the automaker will continue to cut costs in 1983.

"Our quest for doing everything we do for less is never ending," he said. "I don't think we've reached bottom — I don't think we will ever reach

FORD CHIEF PHILIP CALDWELL
Hoping for 10-15% improvement bottom. It's a very active program and it will continue to be."

The automaker recently announced its Milpitas,

Calif., assembly plant will close in June, leaving General Motors Corp. as the only automaker with operations on the west coast.

There has been much speculation the company will close its aging Dearborn Assembly Plant as well. Caldwell, however, said the shutdown of Dearborn is "not something we are capable of deciding in weeks or even months."

The chairman said he did not think there are any further plant closings on the drawing boards, but added it depends on automobile sales in the next few months.

"If we had known three years ago the way it was going to turn out, we would have closed more plants and we would have closed them faster," he said.

"Now in the coming year — are we going to have to endure more or not? We are planning not. But I think we have to reserve flexibility. You can no longer run a successful business with plants that are half full and we have plants that are half full."

Although he considers the half-finished Sterling Heights VW plant a "fine facility," Caldwell said Ford a few weeks ago told the automaker it is no longer interested in buying it.

"It's a question of matching up capacity with demand and right now we have more capacity than demand," he said.

VW planned to build a small car in the plant, about 30 miles north of Detroit, but slumping sales have forced it to curtail the project. GM, Chrysler Corp. and several foreign companies reportedly are interested in the site.

Fed says U.S. money supply jumps

By MARY TOBIN
United Press International

NEW YORK — The Federal Reserve Friday reported the basic measure of the nation's money supply known as M1 rose $1.8 billion in the latest week, and the broader measure — M2 — surged $16.4 billion in November.

Both figures were about in line with expectations, but the market was watching M2, the broader measure of money that the public has available for spending and which the Fed now is focusing on in setting its targets for interest rates.

M2 grew 11 percent over the October level, exceeding the Fed's interim quarterly target range of 8 1/2-9 1/2 percent.

"It's important to note that this short-term target exceeded the annual range because the Fed made allowance for concern over unemployment that led people to build up precautionary liquid balances," David M. Jones, economist at Aubrey G. Lantson & Co., said.

"M2 exceeded the Fed's already liberal targets and that, along with confusing economic signals, reduces the chances of another discount rate cut before year-end," Jones said.

But William V. Sullivan, Jr., senior vice president at Bank of New York, believes the M2 growth "doesn't represent a major violation of the Fed's objectives and that's what we should focus on."

"We still have to believe that the discount rate will be cut in the next few weeks," Sullivan said. "There is no way they can delay it to a much later period."

Indeed bond prices, which have been irregularly lower on the week, notched up slightly following the Fed's report. The benchmark Treasury 30-year bond, the 10% of 2012, rose to 98 1/4 from 97 1/4, just before money supply was released.

M1, comprised of cash, checking accounts and NOW accounts, money that is available for immediate spending, was a seasonally adjusted average of $477.0 billion in the week ended Dec. 1, compared to $474.2 billion the previous week. M2, which is comprised of M1, plus passbook savings accounts and consumer money market funds, and all of which is available for immediate spending, averaged $1,986.1 trillion in November, up from $1,977 trillion in October.

Commercial and industrial loans at the nation's major banks rose $1.25 billion in the week ended Dec. 1, following a decline of $463 million the previous week.

Key interest rates were mixed in the banking week ended Wednesday. The federal funds rate averaged 8.84 percent up from 8.69 percent. The rate on three-month Treasury bills eased to 7.93 percent from 8.19 percent.

The rate on three-month certificates of deposit averaged 8.69 percent, down from 8.75 percent the week before.

Game sales slump not a total surprise

By KATHLEEN BEHOF
Chicago Sun-Times

The unexpected reports by Warner Communications and Mattel Inc. on disappointing sales of video games this Christmas didn't surprise everyone.

"They flooded the market. They actually flooded the market with products," said John Landschulz, an analyst with Messrow and Co. He said sales were down because of that flood, not because of a sluggish economy.

Warner Communications said Wednesday earnings in the final three months of the year and for all of 1982 would be substantially lower than anticipated. The company said sales of its Atari video game products, which account for much of its profit, were below expectations.

Warner's report, which drove the company's stock down Wednesday and again on Thursday, also sent the prices of many electronics companies down sharply on Thursday.

The word from Warner was followed Thursday by an announcement from Mattel, also in the video market, that it will show a loss for the fiscal fourth quarter because of a weak retail environment and higher marketing costs, resulting from tougher competition in the industry.

Warner closed at $36 Thursday, down $15.87%. Mattel did not open Thursday. Mattel's stock fell $2.12 to $24 a share on Wednesday. Coleco Industries Inc., another video game company, rebounded slightly after reporting that it expected a record fourth quarter and its video game sales were up sharply from a year ago, but the stock dropped $3.75 to close at $34.87%.

"There's only so many kids out there who will spend so much money. And there are a few games that are very good, but there are a lot that aren't," Landschulz said. Manufacturers lowered the price on the software to stimulate sales and pushed aggressively with advertising, saturating the market in the process, he said.

"It should not have been a surprise," Landschulz said. "That's a fascinating development and it was exploited. That's it."

The sales were put on the video arcade business months ago he said, noting that the arcade market was where the video boom started.

Kenneth G. Bosomworth, president of International Research Development Inc., a market research firm, said the manufacturers had been fooling themselves on the type of market the video game represented.

"This is not a broad and deep market," Bosomworth said. "This is a fad-oriented market," he said.

While the country had a voracious appetite for one game it found interesting, Pac-Man, that interest did not materialize for other games. Bosomworth said. Buying a video game never developed as a steady consumer habit like buying records, he said. Manufacturers thought the market would sustain itself, and it had pursued a "very dangerous course of employing 12 bright designers to keep on churning out different games with different names."

'Regulators, businessmen on same boat,' EPA official says

Businessmen must share responsibility for regulations

SEATTLE (UPI) — Businessmen must share the responsibility for the federal environmental regulations they so often complain about, the Northwest regional administrator of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency said Friday.

"Such (current) regulations are the product of suspicion, not of trust," John R. Spencer, the EPA's director in Seattle, told the annual meeting of the Pacific Seaford Association.

"Regulators like to point the finger at industry lawyers who insist that regulations be spelled out to the last detail so that no bureaucrat can accuse his client of having failed to do what he was supposed to do," Spencer said.

He called on businessmen to participate in the development of EPA regulations that will achieve the purpose of environmental laws, and noted that amending the laws doesn't change anything without the proper implementation of their intent through regulations.

"Don't get me wrong. There will always be tension between government and business and the regulators and the regulated," Spencer said. "But there would be less tension if businessmen paid more attention to what the agencies do, instead of just complaining afterwards about how the government is killing you."

"Believe me, whatever time you spend dealing with government agency managers will not be wasted. There will be greater likelihood that, when the government makes regulations affecting you, the shoe will fit. The regulations will do what they're supposed to do, and they won't conflict with, or overlap, the regulations of some other government agency."

Spencer said most industrial and business leaders in the country share the national consensus of the value of the natural environment and the public health. He cited general compliance with the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act and other environmental laws as clear evidence of that fact.

"In my experience, business and industry generally want a level playing field," he said. "They'll do what they ought to do to pay the social or environmental costs of doing business, but they want their competitors to do the same. Where they want the government to get in is when somebody — a competitor — isn't doing his share."

But "government regulators and businessmen are travelling on the same boat," Spencer said. "One problem is that we too often have seemed to travel on separate tracks. We are not only passengers on this boat, but we have some obligation to work together to make sure that the boat reaches the destination our society has agreed on."

He urged businessmen to pursue the same kind of communication with government that they have within their own firms.

"If business can adopt the same attitudes toward government agencies as it has for competitors within its own corporate structure, we will be able — together — to reconcile the conflicting concerns that we sometimes create in the bureaucracy and that sometimes are created for us by apparently conflicting demands of various federal laws."
